New Dream with HeyJune Video Transcript:

Okay, hello, how is everyone doing?

So good to see everyone. I really didn't want to miss uh, the couple folks that are overdue because they actually really enjoy these calls, so I'm really hoping they still find a way. But um, Type in the comments how has this venus retrograde treated you so far. It's only been six days, but we're in the thick of it.

We've been in the thick of it, you know, all throughout February.

That was a big reason why you guys took this class too, right? We were getting prepared for the, these retrogrades. Test me on day one. Yeah, but she was like, I don't know. I'm okay. I'm kind of chilling so far.

What about you, Sherry?

Oh, I'm sorry. Honestly, a lot of people are really struggling right now. This is a hard, this is a hard transit. It's a difficult transit. Um, it's a transit that really makes you confront your old patterns, and you've got to make a choice whether or not you want to keep being in that pattern. And sometimes that pattern isn't even like a good or a bad thing.

It just means it's time to shift things around a little bit and try something new.

I need certainty in my life at least.

Good thing I was supposed to recognize it. I'm just curious if you guys want to write down what the pattern is that you think you're struggling with. There's a really big theme coming up across the board around, uh, addictions actually for a lot of folks that's coming up. And, uh, addiction doesn't always have to be alcohol, drugs could be other things, right?

Self worth. So how do you self soothe when your self worth gets triggered? That is something that, uh, I don't know if you're open to sharing, but, you know, us human beings, we all have, like, self soothing mechanisms, right? Affirmations, yep. Toxic relationship.

Go ahead, keep sharing, folks.

Are you addicted to going inward? That doesn't sound like a bad thing, Vanessa. I was gonna say that's kind of a good coping mechanism.

Ah, there she is.

Mm. I love it. Good for you. Bravo. Yep. Okay. The bare minimum.

That's an interesting addiction, just doing the bare minimum. Okay. At least you can put on a name to it. Procrastination.

Other people, there is Zaina and Sarah, right? That should be joining.

Don't come doing enough to survive. Okay. But I find out how to shake off. Yeah. So Um, typically, this class, I have a certain format for it, and I do want to preserve that format, but there's additional questions I want to throw in here today, okay, and it's kind of connected to your coping mechanisms. So, I want everyone, and I know some of y'all have seen these recordings, so you kind of know how this goes, but there is a twist to this call.

Um, who is your favorite movie character of all time?

It doesn't have to be the lead actor, or the lead protagonist, it could be In a supporting character, Wonder Woman. Okay. Ariel?

I hate the Little Mermaid Ariel. Ariel, okay.

Wonder Woman, Little Mermaid, Ariel, who else?

I'm assuming Tiffany, Karis, y'all are thinking. You know, Mulan has come up a lot, um, for several cohorts. Alice in Wonderland, and sometimes Alice, and sometimes the Queen of Oh, nice.

Princess Mononoke.

Okay, now I want you guys to, um, yeah, there are some movies I just didn't watch, right? Like Princess Mononoke, I don't know what that is. Princess, pardon me.

Overall, any female that overcomes adversity, yeah. So I want you guys to really dig deep a little bit. And this may not even be obvious from the movie, by the way. But I want you guys to write out, what do you think this character's coping mechanism is? What do you think this character's crutch is?

You're allowed to extrapolate. It doesn't have to be a literal, accurate thing. I don't think dreaming daydreaming. Yep. That's a, that's a big one for a lot of folks, right?

You need, uh, so that's actually, okay. Now that you say that, I know what that is. Um, Tiffany, a lot of people really like that. It's mentioned that one too. Mulan and that escape the reality.

Okay. Let's let's wait. I'm curious to hear from everyone actually. So if y'all can put a name to the demon itself, the coping mechanism, what do you think it is? Now, you know the punchline. I'm gonna say, no, I'm gonna just wait for everyone to go.

Vanessa, if you can kind of reframe that, her caring for, because it's not just Mushu, right? She also cares for her father. There's a lot of things she cares for rather than seeing who cares about her. I also thought, uh, Vanessa with that character, it was this desire to prove people wrong. Yeah.

Feeling like she needs to protect everyone and that she's responsible. Yeah.

She puts everyone over her knees.

Err, she puts everyone over her needs.

Yep, Eris, that's spot on. Okay, so I'm going to say the punchline, which I think all of you already know, but the coping mechanism you wrote down is your own coping mechanism.

When you get really triggered or when things don't go your way, or it's your way of control. Like, even if you're not, even if it's not a coping mechanism, it's your way of control. Trying to control the narrative, trying to control, um, the outcome. Or, to avoid responsibility, okay? Or to avoid the truth, whatever it is.

So, this begs the question, what are you avoiding?

And I think everyone knows, right? I think everyone spelled it out in the beginning of this call. All of y'all wrote out what you are avoiding. Now, I want you guys to then type out, what is the one great trait that this main character can lean into? To confront their pattern, because we all have toolboxes inside of us. So they have one negative tool, what's a positive tool? What's like one beautiful trait you can call out about this character that can confront this negative pattern?

Self confidence.

I like that self-confidence, uh, for Alice Wonderland, allowing others to help her. Okay.

I'm just gonna put you on mute. Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't know I was talking. No, no, it's okay. It's okay. It's just we could hear background noise. That's what was really going on in the Army. She dealt with men. My arm, my journey in the army was the same, being placed in an all male unit, only female for a bit. Yeah, that's tough.

Self sufficiency, transforming struggles into personal victories. Yep, I do like control. So then I want you guys to think about this. These traits you just described, how can you lean into these traits to overcome their coping mechanism? Because the thing about your coping mechanism is that it's never gonna, it's only gonna push you further away from the truth.

That's the thing about these coping mechanisms. We all, and all we, we all have one, we all do that thing, that automatic habit behavior patterns that we lean into because we're like, Oh, this thing's triggering. We don't want to like fix it. Right.

So I want you guys to think about, like, for example, Vanessa said, um, she said, let's scroll up. Uh, well, Vanessa, I, I think, I think you're really referring to her bravery. That's her superpower, right? Yeah, her bravery.

Oh, funny. Interesting. Yeah, that's deep. But yeah, so let's use Vanessa's one as an example. Bravery is her superpower. Um, how can Vanessa, how can you be more brave when it comes to, but did you even have a coping mechanism though? I feel like you didn't. Your thing was affirmations. Oh spiritual bypassing.

Maybe that's what it is, right? Everything's gonna be okay

Yeah, and by the way that serves a purpose in certain situations But I feel like you're at a point where you've kind of outgrown that right? It's like maybe things are not okay, and it's okay to call it not okay

So we're so that's a perfect example of how you can use bravery to call things I actually had this conversation just like this with another client earlier today I was like, why can't you just say something sucks? I see this a lot in, you know, the spiritual space or clients who want healing. They're so afraid of the darkness.

They're so afraid of something being bad. They're so afraid to call their mother father evil. They're so afraid to say like, this happened to me and it was horrible because I'm in this relationship, but it's not working. It's like, maybe it's okay to just say that and own that.

Because you know that once you can identify a problem, you're brave enough to fix it. Yep, you're brave enough to fix it. Let's pick another example. Um, Tiffany said, Yeah, her coping mechanism is putting everyone first.

Wait, Tiffany, do you really feel like her super, her, one of her superpowers is allowing others to help her? Did I read that right? Like, she puts everyone first, that's her coping mechanism, but she also lets other people help her, that's her superpower? Oh, sorry, sorry, I thought it was, um, I think I thought a different.

I thought, I thought you were asking something else. Oh, it's okay. Yeah. What is the superpower?

Let me, let me think on that real quick.

And it may not be like an obvious superpower. It may not literally be like the ability to teleport or to fly. It's a character thing.

Uh, let's do Karis, self confidence. So Alice in Wonderland, her coping mechanism is to literally, you know, daydream, right? Did I read that correctly? Daydream. Um, Yeah. And yet, her superpower is confidence, which is kind of true. I would also say adventurous. She's not afraid to confront the unknown. She's not afraid. I feel like with Alice, her biggest strength actually is her ability to follow curiosity. Without being scared, so, so, I mean, Alice in Wonderland is kind of an analogy for, um, adults avoiding reality. So they go on a mushroom trip. So she ends up setting herself in the end, yeah. So something that's uncomfortable or boring about our reality, Karis, how can we approach that with curiosity rather than fear? Like, okay, I feel uncomfortable in my waking, sober life.

Instead of running away from it, let me just be curious about it for a second. Like, what about it can be better? Or different? Or what do I really need? Do I really want to down Do I really want to go down like a rabbit hole and talk to a purple cat? Or do I want to be in reality and have real fun? You know, there's there's ways to be curious about that.

Princess Warrior, so I suppose her superpower is being fearless and resilient because she has others whom she needs to protect, is being fearless and resilient. Yep, yep. So how can she that's actually a really good one. I bet you a lot of y'all struggle with this I'm really glad Tiffany brought this up, right?

Like it's so easy to be strong for other people But it's not always so strong. It's easy to be strong for yourself Especially if that means sometimes you might have to self isolate if part of the decision is to be alone Or to protect yourself and to isolate yourself That decision seems kind of hard, right?

Like, the, the, like, that character sounds like there's some codependency there. Like, I'm gonna be strong for other people so they don't leave me. Type of thing. Or that they need me or whatever.

So how could you be strong for yourself and say, I know that I'll be okay alone.

I know that I'm gonna be okay alone.

Mm, mm hmm. Right.

Let's see, who else, who else did we miss? Now, obviously, this is easier said than done. For me to put it this way, you're like, well, duh. But just the superpower that you wrote out, I hope you also recognize you have that in you, too. That's why you can see it in your character. We are never attracted to or drawn to, like, two dimensional characters.

We're always drawn to very complex characters that we know has a yin yang to it, right? A good and bad.

Let's do one more person, maybe. Um, Ariel. What's Ariel's strength?

I want to know Ariel's superpower. Willingness. So, so, okay, yeah. So Ariel and Alice in Wonderland kind of have a similar arc in terms of the character development. Um. Ariel is someone who actually had a pretty good thing going, she just chooses to leave that behind. So, I think with Ariel, uh, Man, I don't even remember the movie, that's the problem.

Like, I feel like maybe she I guess she's just curious about more, like wanting more, having more in her life. That's, you know, and she just assumes life is better out there, beyond the ocean, right? That's kind of what this is. Um,

I would also say confidence too, for Ariel. Because she's so confident that she's okay losing her voice. She's like I have what it takes with or without my voice

So Pachia, do you think in your own life, it's funny because with Ariel, it's the literal grass is greener on the other side, that type of thing, um, do you think maybe there are things in your own reality that you're not noticing is good for you or they could be grateful for, but only if you realized how much you can make your current situation a lot better with the tools in your toolbox, you might actually experience a better reality.

Let me know how that resonates.

It's a little bit like someone who has all the right ingredients, but they don't realize they can actually make a full dish. It's like, I, I feel like that's you. It's like, you're like, you have everything it takes, but you just keep thinking you'd be in a different environment. No. What if what you're, where you're currently at, you can make the most of before you move on to other things.

Hmm. Isn't that fascinating? So I would give that a name. I would give that a name and, and, and actually call out what that is. So, and, and only you know the answer to that, Pachia. Well, in Ariel's case, she actually wanted to experience total novelty.

Like, she wanted literally, like, legs.

Um, okay. So,

I want you guys to look at the character that you wrote down. And because we've been doing this work together. Oh, by the way, how was Obstacle Opportunity? Did you guys like that one? With Hannah? That was pretty cool, right? Yeah. I want you guys to write down under your character's name, Dream, Nightmare, Obstacle.

We already kind of addressed coping mechanism and blind spots, but I just want you to write down what's your character's dream. What's their deepest desire?

And, and then I want you to look at your Neptune placement in your own chart. And see if they kind of correlate.

Hannah's very knowledgeable.

Yes, I want you to write down what do you think is your character's deepest desire.

And also write down your personal Neptune placement.

Succeed, she can't fail too much at risk. People's like, yeah, mm hmm.

Oh, look at that! Vanessa, do you see that connection? Neptune fourth house. Wow, wow, wow. So what she just did, I want the rest of the group to do. Yeah, your main character's your deepest desires and dreams and your own Neptune placement. So, Vanessa's main character Um, it literally wants to save people around her.

And Vanessa is Neptune in her fourth house. This is, you know, her blind spot is her family and her, and her home. Being willing to, it's, it's almost, I always thought Neptune as like romanticizing something, putting something on a pedestal. So, protecting family. Is something that you probably put on a pedestal, Vanessa.

And, and Neptune doesn't have to be a bad thing at all. But, it, it has a connection to your coping mechanism.

Because when your Neptune gets triggered, when it feels like its dreams are not being met, that's when your trigger comes in.

No boundaries for family. Constantly telling yourself it's gonna be okay. Constantly telling them it's gonna be okay. Maybe you over mother them. Instead of letting them just be, right? If you have Neptune in your fifth house, you over mother your lovers. It's kind of like that.

Yep. Neptune, second house, Capricorn. Yep.

Live life on my own terms, don't let fear drive my decisions, find balance between strength and vulnerability. Yep. Yep. Wow, Tiffany, same thing! And if you feel like you're not living up to that ideal, you also get triggered, right? You're like, oh, I'm not good enough for my family. That's very much Neptune, fifth house.

That shit triggers you. But let me look at Sherry's thing. Life, live life on my own term, don't let fear drive my decisions, to find balance between strength and vulnerability.

Okay, where, where's your, where's your Neptune placement? Are we, are we talking about your main char This is, this is about your main character or is it about you?

Pachia, dream to experience more. Yep, Neptune, second house, Capricorn. Ah! Ding ding ding ding ding! Second house is all about money! And employment!

The second house is also tied to actual skills. So there's your clue there, Pachia. You're probably wanting to be better at certain things, right? Like, like be more attractive to certain employment opportunities or be able to attract clients, have your own business. That could be your grass is greener on the other side type of thing.

Well, yeah.

How does that resonate Pachia? Yeah, yep. Mm hmm. So going back to your your main character strengths, she has all the skills to do that. That also means so do you.

It's so funny that now that I know your your chart and all that and your story It's like Ariel. Yeah, she had a good thing going. She had a good thing going and she just wanted more. She even had all the stuff she accumulated in her cave, right? That's very second house Capricorn. Like accumulating stuff, but wanting more. Wanting so much that she even wanted shit from the outside.

Sherry Jang, uh, Capricorn sixth house first.

Sherry, do you mean you have Neptune in your sixth house? I'm assuming yes. Yeah, mhm. Neptune in sixth house? Yeah, see? Your main character's dream is to live life in her own terms. Sixth house is the COO house. You guys learned that with Hannah, right? That's the house of business. They lead, like, literally your day to day operations. Like, how you live every day.

It's funny because I feel like I'm okay with no boundaries for my kids. I'm all about it'll be okay because I generally feel it'll be okay, it's always okay, or is that underlying your Well, are you telling yourself it's going to be okay or are you saying you tell your kids it's going to be okay?

So I love this exercise because um, you know, we all get very defensive when we have to confront our own shit, but seeing it through the movie's lens or another different character's lens, it kind of makes you realize, wait, there can be a new beginning, there can be a different ending to this movie.

That's why I love this exercise. And, um, for a long time, my favorite movie character was Inception, the, uh, whatever his name is, Cobb. If you did 21 Doma, you would know that, that I loved that movie. Um, and I loved it because my coping mechanism was, Uh, kind of, kind of punishing myself. Kind of like he did.

He didn't let himself be happy. And then I realized that was kind of wasting, that was just wasting my time. Because no one really cares when you punish yourself. You think there's some God, weighing good and bad, there's, there's no one that really cares, or watches, or weighs. It's a scale. Yes, DiCaprio.

Deep. Very deep movie. I love that movie. It's still, like, uh, one of my all time favorites. I still look at the ending? Yeah. So here's the thing. I had to reach a point where I realized, yeah, it's a good movie, but I can't hold on to it. Because it no longer represents my level of consciousness. I don't want to be like that anymore.

Which brings us to the next and last segment of this call. Does your character get their dream? Or do they get a new dream? Do they grow up and realize? This was a pipe dream.

I know, you, you really have to think back on your movie, eh?

What was she wanting?

She succeeds in the end, but went through hell. Oh, yeah. She then got the best of both worlds. Yep.

Alice got what she wanted, but in the end, her, uh, her dream evolved beyond where it started. Oh, yeah. Yeah, exactly. That's so cool that you said that.

Mmm. Vanessa, that's so cool. Yeah. That's actually true.

It's kind of funny because sometimes we do, this is, this is very common. We do things, we overcompensate because we think it's what our parents want or because it's, it's what we think our kids want or, and then we do all that to find out maybe the way actually didn't really matter. It's, or it did matter.

It did matter, but, but. Not to such a self punishing degree that we originally thought. Mm hmm.

So I want you guys to then write down this. Your character, as you can tell, was able to manifest their original dream or a better dream. But that was possible because they were able to shift their perspective. So I want you to write down, what is your ideal new dream? I know there's a thing you really, really want.

We're all on this call. We're all doing self development work because we really want something in life. But sometimes there's something better. If we can get rid of our coping mechanism and confront it, actually, with our strengths.

So don't let your fears crop up. If your fears were, if the voice inside your head was not the problem, what is an ideal new dream?

We have Alice in Wonderland. We have, um, Ariel. We had Mulan. All these characters kind of run away, right? They, they go so far to get shit done. But if they were just more present and focus on their own life and their own skills and their own strengths. Without having to overcompensate. What would their ideal new dream be?

Without potentially leaving the home front.

Now that's something that people don't often talk about, right? These movies love to put these characters on some kind of major journey. That's why I love the book The Alchemist, because The Alchemist realizes he didn't have to do all that to find love. The love was in his heart the whole time. That's, you know, that's that book.

That's what it's about.

Or is this Mononoke got what she wanted at the end because she ultimately allowed the boy to join her and help her. You

Okay, so Tiffany, so,

so that's in a very, that's a, there's a twist there because, because in that situation she broke her own pattern of not trusting. She used to struggle with trust, right? She probably thought like, can't trust no man, I can do it all myself, but she broke that pattern. I'm not saying that's a literal thing that needs to carry over into your life, but what I am saying is.

Is it okay to accept help from someone who doesn't come from your family? From, you know, someone who may have very different values from your family. Letting go of control, that's a good one, yeah. Yeah, that's actually a really, like, a way better one. Thinking that you have to do it all on your own, if you can release that.

Yeah, actually, like, if you were to accept help, like, was that such a scary thing?

Is it such a wild thing if an investor comes along?

Or a business partner comes along?

Yes. Absolutely. Amen, Vanessa. That's exactly it.

I love what, how Vanessa just did that. That was very coherent, very, uh, clear. If anybody else wants to take a stab at that, that'd be great. Using your strength to confront your blind spots to solve for or create your new dream.

You guys are really doing the work because you know, most people don't talk at this level. Do you guys realize that? Right now we're in a fairy tale. The minute you leave the zoom club go back to reality people don't think of themselves like this. Or think about their life like this. I hope you guys realize that.

I realized that doing this work, doing, like, having this kind of business. And the minute I'm no longer dealing with, like, phager students, I, like, I want to scream. It seems like everybody's, like, everybody else is, like, in the matrix. I mean, they are, so. I'm slowly working on accepting that it's not true.

You can run much further with a village than by yourself, yep. And if, especially if you come from a very judgmental family, like, very harsh, non accepting, judgmental family, that you could have your own family. And they don't have to be blood related. That you could find acceptance and love elsewhere.

Accept love from elsewhere.

Oh, yay.

Oh, gosh, yeah. I get it. Pachi, I would love to hear from you. What do you think? How do you think you can apply this to yourself and your situation?

Take the superpower, willingness to go for it, with the confidence and curi

The nightmare without you. That's pretty funny, actually, the way you put it.

Right, because, um, right. To go for it with confidence and curiosity and that you have all the skills, because I don't even think the nightmare is not even trying. I think it's also sabotaging what you already have. I think that's the worst situation.

Right? And I'm not saying you're doing this. I'm not saying you're doing this at all. Um, but, again, Second House rules things. So maybe, while you put certain things on pedestal, also sabotaging the other things you already have. Right? That could be, that could be something that happens.

Yeah. Who else? The bigger nightmare would be knowing that you're going to sabotage and follow through with it. Yeah. Yep.

Is this, how do you guys feel? Do you think this is an interesting way to really explore your psyche a little bit?

Pretty cool, right? Again, you guys are doing the work and it's incredible. This is all hinging on the fact that we're all drawn to people that we see ourselves in. That's the thing. That's why I attract so many crazy people, because I'm a reflector. And people see themselves in me. You guys, you have not met crazy. I've met some crazy people in my life. Holy fuck. Scary. Wow. So scary. It's a scary world out there.

Even though the punchline was clear, it made it easier to see. Yep. Yeah, because it kind of works past the ego. It breaks down the ego. And you can say, you know what? My favorite movie character has the same shit as I do. But they overcame and so can I.

Okay, um, does anybody else want to, uh, Leave their final comment or real I haven't heard from Sherry. Sherry, how how does what's your new dream approach with this?

So every time does this mean you realized it was hard to see possibly because my ego is still in the way? Yeah, it's sometimes it's ego and also sometimes it's stories. It's like the these stories of like how you think you should be What you should do, how you should show up, conditioning is a lot. You guys, it's so scary to work with a calcified person.

You all know calcified people in your life, right? Like, people just don't can't grow and change, and you can't see that they're drinking poison, they can't see that they, uh, Have these toxic belief systems. You can tell they're living in addictions and you're like what the fuck is wrong with you? Clearly it's not helping you.

It's like a diabetic person who knows they're gonna die soon if they don't stop drinking sugar. But they keep doing it. Healing is not a rational process. That's why I use movies because it's not, you know, people really change through stories, I think.

Yeah, understand I have the tools and power within me to change my outcome to achieve inner peace. I'm so sorry, Sheryl, what was your movie again? Did you say that? Just say your, what, I, oh, that's right, that's right. I, yeah, yeah, for Wonder Woman, the, I, I really think the story there is defying odds, defying odds, because, you know, no one really thinks of women being able to do all that, right? So that you realize that you can be that one percent that can defy odds and overcome insurmountable things, that you can be that.

Like Alice, when I started believing in myself again. Finding my self confidence, my dream, and um, with Alice in Wonderland, I love that movie too, and the reason why I love it is because it's almost like in her imaginative powers. That's what I like the most about that movie. It's like, wow, there's this girl who has this deep, like, imagination. Like, that's so cool. So if you can create that kind of world in here, you can create the world out there.

That was all, that's always been my takeaway from that movie.

So it's time to be like, okay, why don't I share what I'm seeing in my head with other people?

Sherry, what do you think about that, uh, that statistic thing I told you? I understand everyone may think I can't do it, but I can become that person that defies odds. Because I have all the tools that I need.

Because I think a lot of people, a lot of intellectual people especially, lean too much on statistics. They're like, well, the stats say this, so I can't do that. It's like, well, I think my problem is my emotion.

Well, but even emotion is coming from some place of fear. That's the thing. Some scarce, some scarcity, some limiting belief. So you have to tell yourself you're not going to be part of that scarce statistic. You're not going to be that. You're going to be part of the unlimited, not the limited. Ooh, I feel like you'd have to hear that.

One of my favorite quotes is, there's more where that came from.

So what I want you guys to do after, obviously this is the last call, but what I want you guys to do after this is, and I always say, do as I say, not do as I do. Because I have my own shit. Life is hard. We get triggered all the time. But every time you're feeling like a little bit lost, sad, powerless, I really want you to look at Um, the obstacle opportunity portion that Hannah walked you through, and the movie character's greatest gift that we wrote down.

I really want you to contemplate on those things and just realize you have these skills. You have these tools. The universe is fair. It all gives us something, positive and negative. No one is born with a perfect chart. You are my prince, Eric, because when I saw you on TikTok, it was a dream to work with you. I was even more, aw, you are so sweet. This is so cute. I want to screenshot this. Thank goodness. I actually, by the way, don't know what Prince Eric is, but oh and oh Ariel from yeah, yeah Yeah, I see from duh. Goodness gracious. I can't always uh, put stuff into words, but you guys that is so sweet I'm just curious to also hear from the room Like is anyone feeling like catharsis at all? Cuz that's you know, I don't know if you know this but that's actually the real reason why I started for you Just like I want to give people catharsis. So catharsis is like that deep clarity Of like, okay, like I kind of, I kind of know why I've been doing what I've been doing and I'm going to change some, I'm going to change how I do things now.

A lot more awareness. A lot more awareness. Wow. Nice.

Um, the other thing is that with the nightmare portion, we went through the soul wounds, right? So, I'm not worried about the people who take this class, because you have it now. I'm more worried about the people who don't take these classes. You know, every time I get on a call with a client, a prospect, and they're like, I've been struggling with this pattern my whole life, blah, blah, blah, and they take up like 30 minutes.

I'm like, you know, like, I can just see in your chart, you have like an open head, like, open agena or whatever, like, can't, can't trust what voice it is, blah, blah, blah.

So, hopefully. When you guys spiral and when you have your racing thoughts, you know, kind of where it's coming from and you know how to stop it based and you can identify it and connect it to a soul wound. Yeah. Now I'm a, I'm really big on giving things names because if you can't give things names, you don't really know how to fix it.

So all the coping mechanisms that you guys wrote down after today's call, I also want you to connect it to your open centers because your coping mechanism is a result of you having that undefined center. not be really deconditioned.

Oh, I love that, Vanessa. Did everyone catch that with your coping mechanism and an undefined center in your human design chart? Okay. A couple of weeks ago, we took all, we all took screenshots of your chart of what each undefined center means and how it holds memories and conditions of the past that no longer serve you.

That's where your coping mechanism comes from. So, after this call starting today, your job is to recondition your undefined center with something different. A healthier coping mechanism. Maybe a mantra that says, I can do it, I have the skills, I, I, I know what it takes. I have what it takes.

Mm hmm. Mm hmm. Right.

Um, any other thoughts, comments, questions, gut reactions? Just a heads up, your movie character will change. Always use it as a tool to reflect on where you're going. So if my scoping mechanism is self reliance and defying societal expectations, then am I to match that? Yes. Mm hmm. And I'm sure you have more than one.

Who else?

Much work to be done.

Well, you guys, it was a pleasure working with you. You guys are amazing, terrific people.

I love the fact that this is a small class setting. This was, this was pretty neat, wasn't it? And this was also, like, decently paced out, cause it gets overwhelming. It flowed.
