Nightmare Video Transcript:

So welcome to your nightmare. It's a horrible way to start a presentation, but that is the title of this chapter. So in the last call, we talked about the dream, right? You're the main character slash the hero of your own movie. So if you think of your life as a movie and you're the main character, you embark on a journey.

The main character chases a dream, and when we don't get our dream, what happens? The nightmare. Right? Now what if I told you some of these nightmares were also programmed into you since birth? So when our dreams are threatened by our obstacles, shadow emotions come up. And how we choose to digest these emotions?

Uh, or shadows make or break the trajectory of the future So I want everyone to take a moment to really think about when's the last time you didn't get what you wanted And how did you emotionally react? That moment right there is what divides people and what shifts timelines. Timelines. People think it's about getting the thing that shifts timelines.

No, no, no. It's about your reaction. Every step of the way that basically determines the outcome. So often, the idea or thought of not attaining your dream is so painful that we either deny the truth or seek an appropriate validation. And that is so funny why people are stuck in therapy. That is also the same reason why so many people try to work with someone like me, right?

Like an intuitive person, a psychic, a healer, they're constantly trying to heal, they're constantly triggered, they're constantly reacting. Instead of realizing how you respond to situations, number one, it could be a setup because of your energy blueprint, but number two, um, maybe if you choose to If you work within yourself to respond differently, you'll see it for what it really is, which is just a trap.

basically, if we can't accept the truth, and we keep seeking inappropriate validation, this is how we perpetuate a false reality. A dream that never materializes. And, you have to remember, there is a way to gain the courage and skills to move towards a more resilient dream. A new dream. Meaning you can transcend your energy blueprint.

Tap in the comments really quickly if you're like, I know exactly that moment when I did not react or respond the best because it hit where it really hurts. I was super triggered. Maybe something mommy and daddy did when I was a little girl or a boy and it kind of played out exactly the same way as an adult and I reacted and responded exactly how my nervous system would've when I was 3, 4, 5 years old.

Yep.

Zaina says it happened yesterday. Oh boy. Full moon. That was tough because it's still reverberating the energy. So, the biggest step is to have the courage to understand the origin story of your unconscious wounding. Keywords. Origin story. Of another keyword, unconscious wounding. Number one, seven shadows.

Number two, open centers in human design. And number three, five soul wounds. We may not go into all of them. Um, I most want to focus on the human design, but you will have access to the slides after this call if you want to read through the other ones more carefully.

the seven shadows, um, it was passed down to me from another intuitive teacher. The seven shadows is a belief system Um, slash a teaching that says it's a core part of the human experience and we all have one of these shadows or more of them and they serve a purpose which is for our soul to, to grow, um, so that it can become compassionate and wise.

It's like the light versus darkness, right? Without darkness, there's no light. So your soul cannot expand unless it first experiences some kind of tribulation or contraction or a setback. And before you're like, why are we talking about this? It's got, there's going to be a full circle moment with human design.

But this, these are the seven shadows that I was taught. Abandonment. Addiction, betrayal, physical candy cap, mental illness or depression, poverty or violence. Now, if you think back on your dream session, your Neptune placement, your Pisces placement, the Pisces house perhaps, we also talked about Venus and Mars.

Let's just table that for a second.

Could you see and locate these seven shadows? Can you trace it back to your Pisces house? Could you trace it back to your Neptune placement? Maybe you have Neptune slash Pisces in two, in the second house, uh, six house, eight house, tenth house. One of your seven shadows can be poverty, if that's the case, right? So if you want to take a moment to type in the comments your Pisces house, if you remember that is, or your Neptune placement, and connect it to one of these seven shadows. I want to see, I know like the bells are going off for a lot of y'all in this room, but if you can piece the information together because that's how you best learn.

If you can trace it back to our last session. Please take a moment to do this right now. So maybe you might have a Pisces 7th house. you are set up to experience in many ways abandonment or some kind of betrayal slash addiction when it comes to relationships. So if you have Pisces 5th house or 7th house, you're prone to that.

You're prone to these 7 shadows in that relationship way.

Yep. So the really cool thing about this is now that you have Yeah, Charis, that checks out. Neptune, fifth house. So, so now that you have this awareness, you can kind of see these triggers, these shadows, for what they are. Which is, oh my god, I was kind of placed on this planet to deliberately have these blind spots slash triggers so that I can see it for what it is and gain and take my power back from it.

Because that's how you become powerful, to, to make the issue lose its charge. By becoming aware and neutral about it.

So these are the seven shadows. The reason why we do touch upon this is because human design and astrology, as much as they are cool and systematic and mathematical, it's missing that soul level lesson. So I want to bring in the good and the bad, the light and the dark of The soul's journey, and merge it with human design and, and uh, astrology.

So we already talked about this, but which shadow do you identify with? I think everyone knows. Now, let's pivot into human design, and I'm gonna connect in a second. This will blow your mind. If you don't already know your design, you, you should. Please take a moment to find that. Um, but hopefully, you already know whether you're a generator, manifester, manifesting generator, projector, or reflector.

in case you guys didn't know. 1 percent of the population. Um, and, Within human design, you look at your strategy to determine how you make decisions. So, generators, you have to feel in your gut whether it feels good or bad to you before you make a decision. Um, manifestors. You lead with your instincts. You initiate.

You make things happen by initiating and decide through the motion of your initiations. Manifesting generators are multitaskers. Um, this says take action, so wait to respond. Envision, inform, take action. To be honest, MGs are kind of all over the place. You make decisions, like, as you kind of shoot from the hips as you go.

Projectors. I don't like to say this, but it's kind of true. Wait for recognition invitation. It's a giant way of saying put yourself out there projectors, but don't try to convince anyone or persuade or push anyone. Just let your presence be known. And somebody will come grab you because they really see your talents and gifts and reflectors.

Uh, me, you wait an entire lunar cycle. So if you look at these images, you see certain centers. Define and lit up, right? That is because that's where you can rely on to make decisions. So for example, if you are a generator, every single generator should have this right here, sacral. Defined. This means making a decision from your gut.

Projectors, and, and, manifest, uh, well, Manifestors almost always have their throat defined. So, if you have your throat defined, you make decisions as you vocally initiate, right? But if you're a projector or an MG, you might have kind of like, scattered. Decision centers could be ego, spleen aches, self projected, emotional, so on and so forth.

So I want you guys to type in the comments, if you have a human design chart, which centers are defined for you, because that is where you can rely on to get, rely on to make consistent decisions from. Now, as you can see for reflectors, um, I have no defined center, which is why it says wait to make a decision, right?

Pachias is Manifestor Spleenic. So, when I first started, uh, learning Human Design, the biggest thing that threw me off, and I have no idea why, I don't know why there's not a single Human Design teacher that, that can actually get this, like, accurate, the first go. But, essentially, Projectors, Manifesting Generators, and I believe Manifestors, those three types, uh, could have more than one defined center that is beyond their designated centers.

Whereas generators always consistently have sacral authority. Reflectors always consistently have nothing defined. And manifestors, and manifesting generators, all of them have their throat defined.

Okay, but don't get caught up in that detail. Just just become very aware of what you're what you're defined and undefined centers are because that is where you make decisions from. Are you guys ready to see the next slide?

Okay.

So each centers designate different things. Um, head, Ajna, throat, G center, heart, solar plexus. Spleen. I first want to say if it's defined, that means you're generating electricity from that center. If it's undefined, it means you're not generating electricity from that center. So that also means you have a really hard time making decisions consistently from that, that center.

So this is the big punchline. All traumas and life lessons sit in your open centers, meaning the more you have. The more you have open centers, the more trauma you probably have. Hello? Reflector here. Um, so looking at which centers are undefined should be your very first step in your healing journey. And once your open centers are addressed, then your defined centers will function more properly and easily.

So what that means is, let's just say you're a manifester, and you have defined throughout, right? And I see this a lot with manifestos, by the way. It's kind of like clockwork. It's kind of funny. They're a manifester. They have the ability to speak and get attention. But when they have stored trauma in other undefined centers, they just straight up don't speak up.

Their defined center doesn't get to flex its muscles.

I think Pachia is a manifester. Does that resonate with you, Pachia? So, just because you're a manifester, doesn't mean you become, like, you know, the ringleader, decision maker, whatever. It doesn't always work like that, because your undefined center might be derailing you. If you are a generator, just because you're Your sacral is defined doesn't mean you're always in tune with your gut because in your undefined centers You've been programmed and traumatized to a degree where you can't follow your gut

No, Vanessa manifesting generator generator is the hybrid of manifester and generator

So man, so MGs have both their throat and their sacral defined. The generators in this room, did you guys just catch what I said? Does that resonate with you?

So let's pick an example. Solar plexus. Emotions. Let's just say it's undefined. Okay? Let's just say it's undefined. What does that mean? You're emotionally a mess. Like, like you've been set up in life in such a way where You're very emotionally vulnerable. Um, really, really high levels of codependency is seen here.

Cause you need literally the other to prop you up and feel better. So you need to bring that center to a healthy place. I've actually seen this, uh, with, um, I don't want to throw out way too much generic example because that might freak you guys out. But based on what I've seen, defined solar plexus men, might be women too, but men, they have defined solar plexus.

Obviously, in their best self, they're very emotionally grounding. They're stable. They're a rock, right? That your emotional mess can, like, clash into. Like, like, like an ocean wave to a rock. But, if they have trauma in their other undefined centers, they just freeze emotionally. They can't take it. Instead of being stable and solid, like a solid solar plexus should, they just shut down.

Okay? Uh, on the flip side, an undefined solar plexus man, you know, might, might, uh, be a huge codependent.

I actually think if anyone has solar plexus and spleen undefined, they're really, really prone to addiction. Because they like to rely on other things to either emotionally feel better or to become more aware or to, or to tune into their intuition, or they're scared of their own intuition. So they try to block it, their substance, if it's an undefined spline.

Now, keep in mind. If you have these centers undefined, it's also a place where you can actually achieve great mastery because you've been through so much trial and error. But that means you have to become very aware of what has conditioned you.

Yep. Wonderful.

So like I said, first step is to become aware of your undefined centers. Then it's to look at The defined centers.

So I kind of like already explained, uh, you know, ahead of myself, but basically undefined center is when it's white and not colored. It means that it's undefined. So that specific energy is not consistent for you. This means that you are open to the influence of others. Um, that's, that's what undefined means.

If you have defined. It means, uh, you have fixed and consistent access. These hold your gifts and talents, but like I said, they can be just frozen or locked up.

I would kind of ignore this right now, open, because the difference between the undefined versus open is that, um, open probably means when the two centers don't even connect at all, through any single gate. Yeah. Whereas undefined probably at least has one gate connection. But for the purpose of this presentation, I would ignore the open 'cause there's a separate point that we're trying to get across.

Alright, so take a look at this and see if you identify with this. Check out your open center. Okay. Check out your open center. Go to that section and read it. Is this something that you struggle with? For example, if you have an open head right when it's meaning like undefined head, you might struggle with making decisions.

Maybe you're always trying to answer other people's questions. Doing what others want and not from your own inspiration. Solving other people's problems, confusion, disconnection, doubt. If you have open ego slash heart slash willpower, no, like no self worth. People who I know who have defined ego and heart, defined ego and heart.

Oh my god, beautiful energy. It's amazing to be around them, actually. It's so healing just to be in their presence because they're so good at self validation. And self soothing, and they're loving, they're okay with loving the other, and don't need it back, necessarily. But of course, if it's undefined, it means you have a really hard time loving yourself.

Type in the comments if this resonates with you, if any of these open centers resonate with you. Undefined crown, yeah, head.

So I always thought G and Ego were very similar, but the Ego and the Heart, it feels it's more for like mankind kind of love.

Whereas G slash identity is more about the self. Okay.

Yep, undefined solar plexus, empath, thinking other people's emotions are your own.

I truly think undefined emotional, I mean here it says like this is the most difficult center to heal, decondition, the ego heart, but I personally think As you get older, the undefined emotion gets harder.

So, I'm curious, can you guys see now how your undefined centers flare up, get super triggered in these ways, when you think you don't, when you think you're far away from your dreams? Or when you're, when you're starting to come across challenges, can you see how these open centers get flared up? It's kind of a double whammy, right?

Cause you're triggered, number one, but then you also kind of like, fail the second test. But becoming aware of these triggers And the effects of these undefined centers on you, that's how you start to heal by becoming aware. Oh, I do this. Oh, I react like this. I have this soul wound. I have this undefined center.

I'm, I have the proclivity to chase certain dreams with enormous attachment to the outcome. And of course it's gonna affect my self esteem, my willpower, my identity issues. Um, I'm gonna have a hard time relaxing. I'm gonna have a rational fear. So, so on and so forth. Yeah, does everyone see that?

Okay, so

now let's see here really quickly

Okay, so this was the seven shadows, but I really think the seven shadows and the soul wounds Are pretty interchangeable, but let's look let's get into a third leg. Let's talk about the soul wounds So this is from another school of thought by a slash teacher by Lisa burrow a soul wound is a deep and intense wounding, which influences a person's life and is where our defense mechanisms come from.

And they're often passed down by our parents because they were hurt too in their childhood. So what you're about to see, I'm going to show you, you have, we all have at least three out of the five of the soul wounds with one dominant one. Um, and everything unpleasant in our lives is linked to a soul wound.

Awareness of personal hurt begins the healing process. And the goal is to free yourself from your wounds. In order to become fully yourself. So as you guys can see, whether it's the Seven Shadows, or the Human Design, or the Five, uh, Soul Wounds, like, Um, Sages throughout time, throughout time in human history have said the exact same stuff over and over and over again.

There's, there's some stuff that's so deep and so hurtful that it's a shared universal experience. You just have to know which one you're set up to experience the most. Type in the comments which one you think are your top. Three soul wound that you have experienced that was passed down on to you from your parents Like what would you say are your top three nightmares?

Betrayal. Oh interesting. Yeah, humiliation and justice. Yep Abandonment betrayal abandonment rejection when I first learned this information. I thought it was so interesting that Humiliation is one of them Like, I had never really thought about that. If anything, I thought shame might be one of them, but it's actually humiliation.

And what's also funny is that the real fear behind humiliation is the fear of freedom. But it kind of makes sense, right? Because if you just kind of share your most secret self, your most hidden, private, humiliating self, in a way it is liberating. It's in a way freedom.

And the hidden fear behind injustice is coldness. The hidden fear behind betrayal is separation and denial.

The hidden fear behind rejection is actually the panic of being rejected. The, the fear behind abandonment is loneliness.

So I want you guys to take a look at the screen. Um, so the way to read this is, like, this first paragraph is connected to rejection. The second paragraph is connected to abandonment. Third is humiliation, so on and so forth. Take a look at which one you most identify with. And 10 seconds. Sorry, not, not 10, more than that.

Um, and just kind of reflect on how this resonates with you. Think back to your childhood. Think, think back to that time when this was first planted in your head, in your heart.

Now, if you keep reading, they'll tell you also how it manifests as an adult, right? Abandonment, if you struggle with that, you're gonna live with the sadness and you don't know where it comes from. If you struggle with a betrayal, You're going to have a really difficult time trusting other people into adulthood.

If you are afraid of injustice, you're really afraid of being wrong. You're really afraid of being imperfect.

You might, I would even go out to say, you really kind of play, uh, cop out in the real world too. Like, you love to call out what's right versus wrong. Maybe to a point where you don't need to.

Okay?

So again, I also want you to, as you guys read through this, I want you to try to connect it back to your open center. And the reason why we're doing this exercise is because we're, we're telling you the shadow, we're telling you the soul wound, and we're telling you to connect it back to your open center so that you can think back to your childhood.

When was that first open center programmed through which wound or shadow is everyone with me so far?

Because my issue, like I said, with human design is that sometimes it lacks the soul piece. And we're injecting this with the soul aspect.

So take a screenshot of this. Let's identify your mask. Your mask is a fancy way of saying your conditioning.

It's important to shed your mask for various reasons. Um, but the main thing, uh, is that if you wear your mask, you're not living in present time. You have a really hard time adapting to reality. This is how poverty perpetuates itself. People stay in poverty without realizing that was just kind of programmed into them as a form of the soul wound or one of the seven shadows and they hold on to that programming instead of living life and stepping out of it and embracing the power of their defined centers, right?

They always You know you have a mask if you're always referring to a past time or a thing. Oh, that time when my mommy did this, or when my daddy did that, and when this thing happened. It's like, that's not now, that's not you. That's a mask that you're wearing to keep you safe, because one of your centers that's undefined is wounded.

It needs to hold on to that narrative to keep justifying the mask, because you believe it's keeping you safe.

So, identify or fear or anxiety that comes up when a relational situation, so meaning, you know, like a relationship, like a person, the other. Think about a time when the other. reactivates a wound that makes you go, huh, I am responding to this person in this way. And that that's a mask. Like you have to develop the skill to like, call yourself out like that and make it a point to become aware of these in your daily life.

Did everyone take a screenshot of this?

How does it feel? How does it feel? When I phrase it this way that you're not living in present time.

Ah, very cool, Vanessa. It's awesome

That is so cool.

This is helping identify Amazing. My mask is imposing my point of view on the person I'm triggered by making sure I have the last word Oh Zayn, that's a really good self call out.

I often feel like um, You know, the worst form of this is like war veterans, right? And when they had developed severe PTSD after a war And they think everything's a threat. They think everything's like a battle. I mean, that's kind of the worst forms of a mask. It's like, they're not living life there.

They're still living back in the Vietnam war. It's a little bit like that.

Exactly. You're robbing yourself of good things because of what you're trying to control or what you think is still happening from the past.

Zayna, I'm curious, what makes you say that? Are you able to connect to a certain undefined center? In fact, do you guys wanna, starting with Zayna, do you wanna share the shadow, and then the soul wound, and then the undefined center you can connect it to? So, I think one of the things you mentioned is injustice.

Yes. Gordon on mute, please. Hi. Okay. Let me take a quick look at my screenshots here just so I know that I'm going through it right. So as far as the seven shadows, um, I, I definitely identify with, you know, betrayal being a huge part of my life. And that also carried into the, uh, the other five as well. But so betrayal, poverty, and I think I want to say abandonment with the seven shadows as far as my top three.

Um, my undefined centers, that's something that I'm still struggling with. I have so many that are undefined and I can absolutely see how they affect me in various situations. Um, a lot of it centers around feeling like I'm right, but also doubting that I'm right and doubting that other people are going to understand where I'm coming from, I guess.

And I don't know if that's just from, you know, my throat, my throat being, uh, undefined and so I don't know how to express it or don't feel comfortable expressing it. Um, my emotions definitely pick up the minute I'm triggered. Um, and again, this happened, something happened yesterday that caused me to feel all of this.

So it's all pretty fresh in my mind. Um, and then, let's see, my five soul wounds, betrayal again, being number one, I thought that injustice would be number two, but reading into humiliation, I think that, uh, humiliation is more my number two, and again, I think that stems from, I feel Deep down in my core, like I know myself and I'm confident in myself and I love myself, but when it comes to expressing that to other people with, whether it's words or situations and actions, that's where I start to doubt myself.

I'm afraid they're not going to believe me. Right. Because in the past you haven't questioned. That's where the Absolutely. Yeah. So what is the, what is, and I don't want to get too much ahead of myself, but, um, half the battle is identifying these issues. What do you think is the best way to heal that? Well, I think just to, you know, pick something that's on the top of my mind right now is being more aware of the fact that I do have that quick trigger finger, I guess for lack of a better word, when it comes to immediately stinging back, and I guess that's a Scorpio trait as well, because the minute something comes out of your mouth or something that I disagree with, you're going to hear my thought on it.

And that's not the healthiest thing to do for myself or for any social interaction. Wait, what was your, what was your top three soul wounds again? It was betrayal, uh, humiliation, and injustice. Right, okay, cool. What about your shadows? What were your top shadows? Uh, betrayal again, uh, poverty. And I think that's a scarcity type mindset.

And then abandonment to some degree. Right, okay. Now I'm seeing a thread here. You said you had undefined what? I have undefined, uh, hold on, I'm gonna pull up my chart here. I've got undefined head, ajna, throat, ego, solar plexus, root, and sacral. Mmm, yeah. I hope everybody can see how these, these all connect.

Absolutely. It's not really opening my eyes. Yeah, because the biggest thing you're afraid of is betrayal. So if someone doesn't agree with you, you think it's a betrayal when it's not. That's not what that is. Right. So the way to heal. And again, that that betrayal also comes from like, you know, wanting and seeking permission from other people.

That's the open head, but also an undefined ego, right? Like. It, like, it doesn't mean you're bad or wrong if someone doesn't agree with you, it doesn't mean that you're not entitled to your own opinions, um, your worth doesn't come from other people valuing your identity or your opinions, you're allowed to disagree and have contrast with others.

But because you have undefined centers, because let me tell you right now, people who have those defined centers, defined head, defined ego, all that, defined throat, or, or whatever, they're not gonna care if someone disagrees. They're not gonna see the other, but Charlie gonna be like, okay, you see. Mm hmm.

Yeah, absolutely Definitely things I need to work on because again, it's not serving me well to react the way I react I'm very happy that you uh, that you have come to this realization. I can integrate this now and In all your centers the keys to finding safety and and telling yourself I am safe no matter what No matter if there is Disagreement Not seeing eye to eye or yeah, you're welcome.

Um, really, really, uh, terrific self reflection. Pachia, do you want to go next?

Can you hear me? Yep. Yes. Yes. Um, so my soul, my shadows were addiction and mental. And then my wounds was rejection, humiliation and betrayal. And my open centers was solar root and sacral.

And I think it aligns because I have this like fear of like being seen and being like rejected if I show up as I am.

What do you think is the best way to heal that? And I want you guys to also take a screenshot of this because this is actually the roadmap to start healing kind of real. It's a lot of this is really about reliving what happened and rewriting the narrative, but, but go ahead. But yeah, what do you think you can start doing to heal that?

Um, honestly, I think it's just reminding myself that nobody really cares. I think that we're all here just to, like, have a human experience, and if I'm too scared to show mine, then it's just not living a really fulfilling life, so I think it's just about showing up and accepting I am who I am, because I think one of the, and that follows with the humiliation, like, I have nothing to be ashamed of, like, this is who I am, right?

This is it. And also, I think there has to be a lot of self acceptance and Yeah. And also keep in mind, the fear of being seen or being afraid of who you are, you know, the permission to be who you are, that whole thing, remember that's passed down to you. So people who raised you on some level, maybe they were chastised for being themselves.

Or leaning into or embracing because people who are truly okay with whatever, themselves, their culture, their society, their habits, their quirks, they're not gonna shame somebody else for that. So, also recognizing that a lot of that was passed down onto you, it's not even yours, it's like, you know, hurt people hurt people, it's that kind of a thing.

So, the only way to break that cycle is to recognize, you know what, I was told to not be like this, cause, you know, they were told to not be like that, but I don't have to be that way. You know, just recognizing, like, Who gave it to you and what they went through? You know, it's funny you say that because I grew up in a very, like very, very white town and I was the only Southeast Asian person in my class.

And so my parents, they didn't like say embrace being Asian or nor did it say, try to be white. But it was definitely like being around a lot of white kids that made me feel like, oh, shit, I'm different. And it didn't help that my name was different, too. You know, I wasn't a Rachel or Brittany, and that was made very known.

Yeah, yeah. So it's right. It's like, I'm sure on some level you were told to not. Stick out or stand out because like you already stand out and like you don't want to cause more trouble that type of thing, you know, you don't want a reason to be isolated. Yeah, that's head down. Don't make any don't make any trouble.

That was the thing that was big. Now if you want to go really meta and thank you so much for sharing with you but if you this is for everyone in the room if you want to go really really meta go full on mushroom trippy type deep woo conversation. Maybe you were, you know, born with a certain ethnicity, skin color, gender, whatever, within a certain environment.

Maybe you're placed into that small white town in America or whatever with these undefined centers so that you can, like, learn these lessons, right? Like, you're like a thumbprint. Like, you're a unique combination of circumstances that make you almost be forced to learn certain things instead of falling deeper into it.

That's, that's another way to kind of become more empowered, you guys. To kind of see your life as, huh, yeah, I'm just like these unique landmines were planted and buried on the floor so that I'm supposed to step on it and they're supposed to blow up and so that I can become better.

It's just a terrific way, in my opinion, to take back your power. It's like, I often hear about like, you know, rappers, singers, like, oh, I was like the only black kid in this white town because I've heard a couple of things. And I'm like, yeah, but you're famous now. So maybe this is uh, what it kind of took.

Because you have an interesting perspective, you can talk about it, you can sing about it, you can rap about it. And therefore, you can create and bring in greater awareness and diversity to this world through your art. Like, I think about these things a lot, you know, like, why some people have a harder time than others.

Or seemingly impossible situations more than others. Like, I think these are all spiritual lessons.

Okay.

Cool. Final slide. Please take a screenshot.

And I want to hear from one or two more people. Pick a prompt and I want to hear a response from just one or two more people.

So take a minute.

That's right. Save space

Vanessa, let's go

Okay. Hi everyone I think I'm gonna pick how have your past struggles shaped your self concept and your beliefs about what? is possible for you because Um, like, one thing I did notice is my, my Anja is very defined. So self awareness lately, because I've been doing the work, really, really is blossoming.

And when, and when you explain all of this, It does connect the dots and, um, and so I am definitely in a better place, but I think it helps that my center is defined because I guess externally, I can shut all that external out and just work within myself. If is that, uh, am I right on the right track? Yep.

Yep. And, and I feel it. I, I, I'm a huge feeler and I feel things. So, um, more than I am a, uh, a talker, which is funny because I do advocate. I'm very much about. Um, you know, everyone deserves to, uh, to just have the right to live in peace and, you know, and not be suppressed. So I'm huge on not, on not being suppressed.

But, um, injustice for me is still, I guess, where my Past struggles are still shaping me right now. Um, and I'm, I had a tough mom. She, uh, just recently I went to visit her and I went to hug her and she goes, you know, I'm not a hugger. And I'm like, Oh yeah, that's right. But, uh, but I'm a lovey dovey person, you know, I'm very lovey dovey, but that's my father was too.

So I had a balance, which I think helps, but my mother wasn't a hugger. She was the, she was the one that disciplined. And if you, said anything or did anything, you were stupid or et cetera, et cetera. Um, and that's because she also, and I learned this later, she, she struggles with trusting people, but I'm a very trusting human being.

And, um, and I just recently learned the betrayal lesson with my ex husband, but because my mother was so tough and yelled at me a lot, I figured that's how I. That's how that's normal to be loved like that. Ended up in an abusive relationship and was very betrayed because he hurt my Children while I was in Iraq and he's in jail now.

But he did very, very ugly things. And so betrayal. And so Normally, now I shouldn't trust anyone and I didn't for for quite some time, but I think this is where I did the work, um, where, where now I still trust people. I trust people. I'm cautious in the sense that I think I'm smarter now too. And I, and I listened to myself and the cues on people and, and I feel like internally, I no longer.

And like, like I, I listened to my instincts now, whereas before I had self doubt and that's where, you know, I doubted myself because I was always told how, how stupid I am, you know, for, for being myself, you know, I was all over the place and that was funny because you said manifesting generators are all over the place.

I'm still all over the place and I thought that that I thought that seeing other people not be all over the place. I'm like, what's wrong with me. And so I think that, that self concept and that, that belief that I was never good enough. I think that's what I still, hmm, I think that's, I, I, I don't, I second guess myself, but I'm doing better.

And, and I don't speak up when I really want to speak up. I don't, I'll hold back. Did you say you had undefined G center or heart center? Yes, I, I have, well, yes, undefined, but nothing open, actually. So when you put the definitions, I thought it was open, but actually every, every center has at least one colored gate, even whether it's halfway or completed.

So no open centers, but yes, undefined G, spleen, head and heart. Mm. Yeah. Yeah. So that will do it. So it's, that's interesting, right? Because you have a defined Ajna. So, you know what you believe and you know what, what, what opinions you have, but the minute somebody disagrees with you or puts you down, then yeah, your other undefined centers take over.

That's kind of what happens. Yeah, but I am grateful for that, Anja, though. I think that's my saving grace. Yeah, for sure. Amazing. Thank you so much for sharing. Thank you. Uh, we can have one more person take a stab at this before we wrap. And also, please feel free to type in the comments, um, what was your favorite part of this presentation or class?

Because we covered a lot, right? There's a lot to think about. There's a lot to start There's a lot of work to start doing so that you can start deconditioning.

Thank you.

Nobody has anything else they want to share based on these prompts? Tiffany, uh, Sarah, Karis, no pressure! If no one else wants to share, because I know some of this stuff is kind of triggering. So, I'll share. Yep. A little different for me, I don't usually do that. So, I like the second prompt because it kind of fits into something in my human design.

So the, what is the one thing that people do that annoys or angers you the most? Um, indecisiveness. Mm hmm. And it's funny because my head center is undefined. Mm hmm. Um, and while I sometimes, well, used to struggle more so with being indecisive, I've done a lot of work to correct that. And then when I started noticing in other people, I'm like, Oh, I can't, I can't handle that.

That drives me crazy. Um, and the more I like tap into how I'm making decisions and being more decisive about things and getting crystal clear on like my purpose and all that other stuff, the more annoyed I get. when I see it coming out in other people and now I'm just calling people out on it and it's kind of funny.

But I just, nothing deeper than that. That's all. I just wanted to share that little nugget. But I like how today, like, it's really helping me kind of connect like my human design and like some of my past traumas and how all of that kind of connects. So I just want to say for kind of like helping me connect some dots that I didn't even know were disconnected still.

So thanks. Oh my gosh, yeah, thank you for sharing. And, and you bring up something really interesting, and I say this as someone who has everything undefined myself, once you start to gain mastery over your undefined centers, if you start to see it in other people, yeah, that it gets really annoying because you're like, how come you don't get it?

You know, um, but it speaks to the fact that you had to work extra hard to master that undefined center. So some human design people, also teach that where you have undefined centers. Is also where you can make money, because you can teach other people how they can do it, how they can do the most. So for example, like if you, if you know, you could, if you have like undefined G center, but then you really work hard at it, you can become like a self love coach, that type of thing.

Okay, so Sarah says, I'm looking forward to sitting down with all information and connecting the dots. I know this is a lot. So I want you guys to start from once again, looking at all your undefined centers. Understanding what they mean and in parallel, looking through the shadows, looking through the soul wounds and saying, which, which one of these do I have and categorizing it by the center and then going deeper and asking, what was the thing that happened that created this mask, this coping mechanism for me?

For this undefined center, let's go back to the mask really fast, because I think there might be a little bit of a confusion of what a mask is right so the best way to start is look at your soul wounds like what are you afraid of rejection abandonment humiliation. And what's the mask you wear what what are some really difficult ways you overcompensate to, to hide that you have these wounds that you have these shadows.

What's your default response mechanism?

And, uh,

I guess we didn't make like a direct connection between the mask and the and the centers, but I don't think that's really necessary. I think it kind of speaks for itself. It's like, yeah, you have an undefined center, which invites a certain experience into your life that creates the wound. But instead of really healing that wound, you just wear a mask, you know?

So actually, so instead of actually just becoming self loving, you become defensive, that type of thing, right? Like instead of really healing that G Center, you just become like this like cactus y person, like very prickly. So, this is the work, just like how Vanessa said, how Zaina said, this is the work, to connect these with odds, to trace back the steps, to really get super real and honest with yourself, like, you know, what are these triggers that I have?

And to be honest with you, if you have a really bad spending habit, for all of, for a lot of us that have financial issues, terrible spending habit, because of an undefined center, for example, maybe you struggle with addiction, so you spend all your money on booze or whatever, that's a mask. Money problems are a mess.

You're compensating for something else by overspending when you really should not be.

Yes, for sure. Right. It's so much easier. It's so much easier to drink alcohol and numb your wound instead of asking, yeah, why am I? Why am I going for the alcohol? Why am I going for that cocktail?

Or in Zaina's case, yeah, why am I getting angry and trying to be right? What's wrong with if I'm, you know, not in agreement with someone? Oh, it's because I feel betrayed. So in Zeta's example, reacting, trying to be right, was like the mask. And that's not really her. Uh, is that helpful at all, Sarah?

I totally understand you might need some solo time. I think we all do. But, it's good to reflect through these things. Thank you. Okay, thank you for coming to class today. You guys did amazing. And, uh, I am really hoping that a lot of y'all feel and have more clarity about your triggers. And your dreams and the next time we meet we're going to learn about your strengths and your weaknesses that you can actually deploy for business.

And when hard times hit, you can lean on your strengths. That's actually the best way to get over an addiction, but we'll save it for next time. Okay. Thank you so much. I will see you guys next class. Bye. Have a good
