Business Growth: The Empress A - Video Transcript

Welcome to the Empress Module where we sort of go behind the veils a little bit and look deeper into the secrets of screenplays, the secrets of storytelling, sort of age old strategies and tactics that big names in Hollywood uses to produce, uh, multi-billion, multi-million generating movies. So. This is something that I learned from, um, a, a screenwriter who worked for like Warner Brothers and all that, and, uh, I can't mention who it is, but she kind of became famous for this methodology and it's something that I've sort of incorporated and baked into all my short videos.

It may not be as obvious right, to like the naked eye. But if you adopt this method and you start making 32nd videos, you'll, you'll recognize that there's like an overlap that kind of starts to happen and it'll, it will also free you up to make content more seamlessly and tell your story more smoothly and systematically.

So there is a formula to storytelling, video format, and otherwise really quickly content is only as good as efficiency and engagement. If your content is taking you too long to create, you gotta take a step back. Okay, so the reason why I preface this upfront is because I talked about profitable screenplay formulas, right?

Also, keep in mind, like none of us have Hollywood budget. So yes, I am extracting that formula and sharing with you guys, but still make it production efficient, meaning don't try to do anything fancy. Um, you don't need like outrageous costumes, hair, makeup, whatever. Um, so whatever we're about to learn.

Keep in mind your own energy, be energy efficient as far as like, uh, output and creative process. The other factor is content is only as good as the engagement that it gets. It doesn't mean every single content you create has to get a ton of engagement. That's so stressful. Do not optimize for that.

However, recognize that should be your North Star. So especially if you have a business, right? Because this is content that drives business traffic. That's what we're here to talk about. If your content does not somehow serve your brand or your business in the long run, AKA, it doesn't generate clicks, it doesn't generate views, or it doesn't generate some kind of like discussion.

Um, you might wanna consider tweaking your content strategy. So before we dive super deep into all this like strategy stuff, just keep this in mind, in your back pocket to anchor you no matter what you make. And by the way, engagement is also, um, important, not just for videos, but later on when we talk about email engagements, right?

We're gonna look at your email marketing. That's a content. Whenever you write out, you know, newsletters, that's content. Also. It's, uh, when you, for example, go live, even if it's not like a recorded video, if you go live and start speaking to an audience. How are you actively engaging with your viewers? How are you incentivizing to stay?

And maybe like if you tell them like, Hey you guys, you only have like an hour to go set of a blah, blah, blah. Do they actually like listen to you? These are all metrics to look out for. Alright, so I already covered that, but efficiency, how, uh, quickly can you produce it? Engagement, does it get people to engage?

This is also where the creative and the business purpose comes in handy, right? So. Remember how we spent like a whole week talking about creative purpose and business purpose? Yeah. That, that, that's all very deliberate. So we will engineer engagement. So once again, if something is taking you too long to produce, consider a different medium, right?

So for example, you can produce a video, but if you're like, Hey, I don't actually wanna speak for 30 seconds, like I have Pisces, mercury me, and uh, it's gonna take me too long to explain something. Do text overlay. Right. Or, or like meaning like write out a text and just point at it. Or if you're like, I don't wanna like shoot all these footages, okay, then just take photos and green screen it, flip through the photos, whatever it takes, like whatever is fastest for you to produce.

Do that. If you're natural communicator and can just turn the camera and talk, um, do that, that actually, that takes me the longest. So I don't, I don't do that as often. So what's the solution to efficiently producing engagement and also efficient production? You plan it out pre-production, production, post-production.

Also, quick disclaimer, keep in mind it's, it's, it's not easy to, you know, teach the entire screenwriting formula in like one sitting, right? So this is just Cliff Notes version. Um, the shorthand that works for me distilled down specifically for a short video format. So do your own research if you ever are looking to make long reform content, whether it's 60 minute, 90 minute, um, so just keep that in mind.

Pre-production planning. Plan your content. We spent significant amount, amount of time talking about this, right? With the evergreen and topical. It's good to, and broad niche relevance. It's, it's good to get a head start. Think about these things. Everything we've been doing up to this point, honestly is pre-production.

So you guys have all been doing this. So, um, pick a topic and which you, which all of you guys have. Basically, you picked a niche, so from the reis. You should have basic ideas as far as like what types of content you want to create and what kind of stuff you wanna put out if you don't have ideas, right? E even, even by now, if you don't have really like solid ideas, ask your audience, take polls.

Like what do you guys want to watch? What do you guys want to learn? So Hollywood as an industry does spend a lot of money researching what they think the audience will want to watch. They do a lot of, um, sort of backward analysis on historically successful movies. That's why they made like 10 Marvel movies because track records show again and again that people love the Marvel series, so they keep making the same thing.

So ask your audience what it wants. Also, this is one of my favorite tips. It's so underrated. Ask your higher self for content ideas. Like, Hey, like, what should I make today? Or what do people wanna hear today? Like, help me out. And your higher self will help you out. Like literally I get like boom downloads like that.

Um, and, and I also, just from what I've seen from other creators, I, I think they have a similar practice that they would not call higher self. So once you, um, decide, once you decide on what you wanna talk about or make about plan out your four ACT structure, the four act structure helps the audience engage.

This is the four ACT structure's. Really, a lot of it's really psychological. And after today's class, you know, pick your three favorite movies and see if they follow the four act structure because I guarantee you it will.

And also, yeah, the four x structure also includes the hook. All. Every good movie has the, has a hook, believe it or not. Um, the other key element of pre-production is you do sort of have to keep in mind how long you want, um, your content to be the length. So this helps you with batching. So batching is like in one sitting, creating like six piece of content or 10 piece of content.

Like if I tell myself like, I wanna make five 32nd videos, right? You know, I can give myself like an hour, two hours to shoot that. If I plan to like pump out three hour long, three individually, hour long YouTube videos, yeah, I might need like two days, right? So pre-production also includes duration, like how long you take to carve out time to produce stuff.

Um, this also helps you plan for recycling content. So knowing the length of your content in advance also helps you plan for recycling. So what do I mean by that? All the stuff that you guys produced before. So I'm looking at every single person in this room who has a TikTok, which you all do, look back some of your most viral piece of content, just repost that.

That's actually also a strategy that also, that works all the time. Just repost that and um, that's also gonna help you figure out, okay, like, which ones do I pick based on the duration that fits for what I'm trying to put out today?

So once again, pick a topic, determine the four ACT structure, decide the length. Hopefully that's straightforward. So the four act film structure. Has anyone heard of this before? No. Okay. Um. I have sifted through lots of screenplays. 'cause my Virgo Rising was like, there's no way this is true. So I've actually sifted through a lot of screenplays just to see if this, if this was accurate.

This is actually pretty accurate. Like some of the most viral bestselling movies ever follow the structure. So the first part is the dream. This is the hook. You're literally getting inside your viewer or your audience's like dream. This is gonna be a recurring theme. You guys, like, you have to be obsessive about what it is they want.

Like what's like their deepest desire that they're like two shames, like verbalize. So the dream is to like paint a picture to them. Like, Hey, this could be you. This is possible for you. You could have this thing, or I solve for this. I have this dream life. I manifested whatever. Right? That's like the, the hook, the dream, and then you go with a nightmare.

Oh, you know, the opposite of that manifestation. Like, I really want a, a successful marriage. Like, or you wanna release little marriage. But then your partner cheats on you, or your partner doesn't wanna commit, or your partner says, you know, they're actually not looking to get married, whatever the scenario is, right?

So you paint them the dream and then you say, but here's your problem. Here's your struggle. So you're getting into their brain in two different ways. Not only do you understand what they want, but you also understand what they don't want. So this like shocks the brain to be like, Ugh, I wanted that dream, but now this person's talking about my nightmare.

How do I get out of this? And then you basically, you twist the knife with the obstacle. You exacerbate their nightmare. So you want a happy marriage. You could have it up, but you have a partner who doesn't wanna commit up just to make things worse. This partner might also have somebody else in the picture.

Hopefully you don't make this TikTok at all, but that's just an extreme scenario, right? The final act, which is the dream. The second dream or the nightmare. Either one works. Uh, pardon me. Not not nightmare, second dream or like a brand new dream. Or an original dream. So this is where you are, the solution.

You come in and say like, this is possible for you. This original dream, like solving or saving this marriage is possible for you. I'm gonna show you how, or there's actually a better life waiting for you outside. You don't have to hold onto this, this, this thing. Let me show you. How did everybody get that?

The four x structure? Okay. I understand that if you, for example, sell like a merch, like a t-shirt, this wouldn't make sense. Um, I wanna make it very clear that this four x structure is kind of fluid. That's like the little, um, advantage that a short video has where you can collapse these things and really highly skilled content creator do collapse these structures.

So if I'm selling merch, I would just focus on dream, for example. Maybe I'll focus a little bit on the nightmare, right? Like showing a, a competitor, merch or competitor product that's not as good or, um, the nightmare can be just lifestyle, right? So someone's like day in the life. It's not great. They're in a shitty mood, but oh my God, they just got your merch and they're in a much better mood now.

When it comes to beauty and makeup industry, they do a really good job with nightmare dream and obstacle. Well, they do really actually beauty makeup videos, uh, makeup videos in general, like they do the whole four Act structure very, very well. Basically, they're showing an entire transformation, right? The dream, like some of your just go Google or just search some of the best beauty content creators.

They usually start out with like the end product, right? The end. Look, that's the dream. And then we switched to nightmare, which is like faced with no makeup. I hate calling it that, a nightmare, but. And then they go into the obstacle, which is, oh, but this is your skin texture. It's actually, you have actually oily skin, or you have this acne, so you need, like, what do you do?

Like the conventional makeup doesn't work. So then dream number two comes in where it's like the makeup artist being like, you know what? I'm the solution. I'm experienced with this. I'm gonna cover all your flaws. I'm, I have all these like alternative makeup options that you can use if you can't afford like Chanel and like, use this instead.

You guys see how like, even though different industries may not like appear like they're using this, they're all using this kind of structure. Okay, great. So that's your first option, right? So the, the second dream is basically your, your other opportunity to insert your hook, your servicer product, or your business.

Option number two, as far as like creating your content structure is the classic sales narrative structure, objections, results, benefits, urgency. This is a sales script. Um, so first, like when you have a product or service you wanna sell, leading with the objection, the common objections first, because we all have competitors in the industry, right?

Like your client. Could have been dealt with some shitty cards and went to your competitor maybe who are not as good as you. So your clients may have objections for you, Hey, I've done reiki. It didn't work. Or, I've hired this dating coach, it didn't work. Or, you know, I tried to do animal crossing, or I tried to apply to med school.

Didn't work. So you as the expert, just, just, just knit that in the butt. You handle the objections by being like, um, these are some of the most common pitfalls of industry experts that I am willing to address, or that IF, that I have found a workaround. And here are the results. Based on my experience, based on what my clients tell me, based on my number of experiences in working with X, Y, Z.

Then you go into the benefits, like reminding people once again, like why they need you, why they need this to improve their life, how it could actually, um, give them the opportunity that they thought they lost.

And finally, urgency for every single person who intend to have a live. And by the way, going live. I, I'm so glad that EJ brought this up a couple of weeks ago. Going live is a great opportunity to make sales. Because you're right there. Like you're in people's faces, like, they're like, oh my god, this like a real person.

So they wanna buy from you. Um, you can also follow the structure in a life. So urgency is like, and it can be genuine urgency, right? Like you can say things like, it's a holiday, I'm giving a, um, like a Valentine's Day special or like in Independence or Christmas Day special, whatever it may be. You only have two days to sign up or two days for 50% off.

It can be time-based or it can be like. Um, I'm about to add more content or I'm about to release this to like a, like a, a special group of people, but so before it gets gated, you know, this is like the one last time I offered to the public, whatever it may be. There's lots of different ways to like gate your service or product and create urgency for people to go sign up right then and there.

So after hearing the objections or, or how you combat their, uh, objections, hearing about the results, hearing about the benefits, well now they're gonna be like, okay, I want it. Where do I sign up? And then you just hit them with, well, you only have like two hours to sign up. And they're gonna be like, okay, well, we'll just, I'm gonna do it now.

Then what of my favorite urgency tactics that I've, I've come across is like, I only have a hundred coupons available. So for the first a hundred people that sign up, they get this discount code. That's been pretty cool, like limiting the number of spots available for like a certain amount of discount or limited seats.

So whether it's option one or option two, you can take any length of your content and divide it into four. So if it's a one minute video, 15 second each, doesn't have to be exact, but you can toggle back and forth. Okay, so once again, if you've been taking this class, which you all have up until this point, you should be familiar with pre-production.

Even if you haven not made anything yet in your head, you should, you know, have very basic high level strategy of like what you wanna talk about, who it's for, what you're giving them, why they need it, um, and how it's gonna improve their lives production. So for those of you guys that attended the masterclass a couple of days ago, this is a primer.

Um, but also there, there, there's probably some information in here that could, um, be new for you. So have a space where you can have a backlight and front light. Remember we talked about key light, fill, light and backlight. Forget the fill light if you don't want it, it's actually not necessary. Um, you can just have.

Frontline and back light in a dark surrounding, especially if you're shooting at night. If you're shooting during the day, just use daylight. That's fine too. I shoot 99% of my videos at night because that's how I was trained, like as like a film student. All of our productions were in like a dark studio.

So like that's, it's just something I'm like very accustomed to equipments. Um. Option number one is to just, you know, use your iPhone lavalier mic ring light. Option number two is to go pro use cameras, podcast mic, et cetera. Obviously over time they'll start to blend. You can mix and match. So, for example, tarot readers, anybody in this room who tr who, uh, wants to use cards or wants to use even like show your book or whatever, um, you can get a mic and you can get an iPhone.

So one can be overhead and one can be like your, for your face. So you can do like dual screens when you shoot like a YouTube video. So if you have questions about that, we can get into that. But starting out, remember I told you that your content is only as good as how quickly you can produce it. So when you're just starting out, don't complicate the situation.

By having all this fancy setup. In one of my previous classes, a student. I think went all out and bought all this crazy equipment. Like she invests in like a really expensive, um, like fill light tool. Not an actual light, but some that reflects a light. Um, I don't like to this day, I don't know if she's used it.

So, so start out small, start out simple. And as your content machine gets like larger and larger, then start to like invest in, um, expensive stuff. That's it. That's as far as, uh, like the, the production piece goes. Once again, if you guys want more notes on it, refer back to the masterclass. All right.

Post-production, so, uh. Once again, like I've seen, it's so funny because before you work in the film industry, you think all this stuff is like super fancy and complicated. It's really not. Um, there's various editing softwares you can use. There's like V iMovie, Adobe Premier Pro. Um, many of you guys know that I love Tube Buddy for analytics.

It does not edit videos. Um. It does not edit videos, but it does like optimization for, for hashtags. So it, it does end up kind of becoming an editing software because you kind of know like at what points to like put in like, you know, focus points to like for 'em to pay attention to because it syncs with a hashtag and whatnot.

However, I want you guys to know, like real talk out of all these editing software. First of all, there's many more than this. There's like splice, there's a lot right? I fired VI stopped using V mainly because I have an editor now, so I guess that's not really firing. It's more like replacing, but whatever.

I don't use V anymore. It's like a short form video formatting. I don't use Adobe Premiere Pro anymore, I just use iMovie, and even then, that's very rare. Why? Because we're all making short films, right? Short videos. You can just use your phone for that. So. But anyway, when you plan for post-production, you know, you still gotta understand like, how am I gonna edit my stuff?

So pick an option. Publishers, um, obviously there's ig, like Instagram, TikTok, YouTube, but I specifically want to focus on platforms that have auto captions, right? So why is this important? You want people to be engaged and be watching your stuff. So as you speak, it never hurts to have captions on. So Instagram now has like captions for live.

It has, uh, captions for reels if you're speaking. The other, the other point that I wanted to make with the publishing thing is automatic publishing. So Instagram, Canva, and Facebook creator studios are able to schedule and publish for you. However, it doesn't do that with reels. It can't publish reels, which kind of defeats the purpose.

You still have to man, manually publish reels. TikTok, it has a built in scheduler. If you use your desktop. Who knew this by the way? You can schedule TikTok videos. You can go to tiktok.com, not on your phone, but on your computer. Log into your account and you can like, I think schedule out up to two weeks worth of videos.

Have I done this? Not really, but that's my problem. So, but now you guys know that this is a hack you can use. It's one of those, it's one of those things, it's like a book that like you want to read, but like you don't wanna read just yet. So you like put on the shelf and you know how good you're gonna feel when you read it.

Like that's how I feel about TikTok publishing. And I've been in this state for like a year now. Um, YouTube, you could have iMovie published for you or you could just, um, schedule publishing in YouTube. YouTube's actually a terrific platform, honestly, like, they're like the OG video platform, right? So they really know ha they ha they all, they have these like really amazing bells and whistles.

So shorts. Everybody who's making short form videos, you should be uploading on YouTube 'cause you never know. You can schedule YouTube shorts, you can just upload like 10 and say like, I want this to be published like in a staggered way. So your takeaway from this section should be TikTok and YouTube schedule stuff for you and they auto caption for you.

So always add caption, especially because some people like can't like hear in certain settings or they have, they're, they're hearing impaired. So they just also need the words analytics. Don't worry about this so much, we're gonna go into this later, but most platforms have built in analytics. So one thing we're gonna do later today is go through everyone's, everyone's videos and look at your best performing videos.

Just eyeball it, and I'm probably gonna tell you to double down on that. Whatever went viral for you. Do more of that. The intention behind analytics is to figure out what's working, quite literally, and, uh, and to stop doing what's not working or, or to take it or to tweak it, right? So it could, it could have been a viral video, but maybe post it at the wrong time.

So try to repost it a better time. So these are some things you have to keep in mind when it comes to post-production, right? Like, what am, what am I gonna edit with? You know, should I schedule it? Which platforms let me schedule it? Which platforms let me autocaption it? And also like, will it give me analytics?

So I. Is everybody clear on the post-production piece? Some high level things to look out for when you make your videos. Again, I understand you may not have thought about this before, um, but thinking about your content in advance at this level will really free you up so that you don't, you know, you don't like, you're, it's not like you made a piece of content and then like you debate, okay, what editing tool do I use now?

Or like. I'm really bad at this, but even like publishers, right? Like I always forget that someone like a platform can publish for me or schedule for me. I keep forgetting that. And so I create a lot of like inefficiencies in my production process in my post-production process. And I'm personally getting to a point where I need to be better about batching my content.

Like I have to stop making these one off contents just because I feel I feel some type of way, right? So if I want to be better about batching, I gotta pay attention to publisher tools and availability and a capability.

So speaking of batching batch creation strategy, who has heard of this before? Batching. Okay. Many of you guys, so on a very, there's many ways to batch your content. The simplest way, of course, is to grab clips from your long content. So if you, anybody in this room who has a course or is about to create a course or has, um, even like a client session, a group coaching session.

I always tell you record that like, right, like record that shit. Do not take it for granted. It's, it's, it's your breath, it's your time, it's your words. You speak it, it contains value. Record it. So any long form con content that you have, you're grabbing clips from it. Like highlights, like really important parts that like encapsulate who you are.

This is something that I had to like teach my editor because this is also a skill, like I had to tell him like, listen, um, there are certain parts that are more pertinent than others. So grab those parts. It's also a good thing to teach yourself, like it teaches you critical thinking and really puts yourself in the audience's point of view, what my audience would like.

So from your long form content, extract the hook, and because you already planned your content in advance using the four x structure, guess what? You already know which part is the hook, right? Did everybody get that? Yeah. Okay, great. I'm gonna say that one more time because you already follow the four x structure to make the content, even if it's 90 minutes long.

You know which part is the hook. So grab that part, or you know, which part is the nightmare or the obstacle. Grab whatever's most shocking and turn that into a short clip. So this is one of my favorite, uh, batch strategy. The other added benefit of the batching strategy is that you get to recycle content.

You get to preserve, um, your energy. So for example, YouTube can go up to an hour, right? There's multiple 52nd, 32nd clips it can grab from that and publish out to other platforms. TikTok. Now, by the way, I don't know if anybody knows this, so let me know if you guys know this, but TikTok now lets you upload up to 10 minutes.

So what that means is you can shoot a 10 minute YouTube video and you can upload that just like onto TikTok. These platforms, you guys are, are getting really competitive, like really aggressively competitive. They want each other's audience. I I, I always kind of thought that YouTube be a powerhouse. I don't know if that's always gonna be the case anymore.

It still has a very competitive pay rate compared to TikTok. Um, just for ads and stuff, however, I think I'm pretty sure tiktoks trying to like, think of a, a way around that. So just keep that in mind. Okay. Now you can upload to 10 minutes off to TikTok Instagram. You could, I have to update this. It says 32nd reels.

Actually now you can upload up to 62nd reels on Instagram. So all platforms, minimum one minute minimum. So I think this is a really good opportunity for you to examine, how do I define content? And by the way, the answer is everything. Everything's a content. If you go live on your Instagram stories, download it, save it, repost it on TikTok.

Um, if you teach a class, if you join someone else's class, something, whenever I have like a guest speaker. Whenever I, I partner up with someone and have a guest speaker on my platform. I actually offer the, I'm like, Hey, you're starting your business or your career. Like I record all my stuff. I'll give you your clip for free.

And they're like, really? I'm like, yeah. And they're like, but can I post it? I'm like, of course. This can be like your opt-in for people, right? The guest instructor stuff that you did for me, that could be your opt-in. So save everything. So let's look at examples. Um, you guys know that I produce, pick a card videos, my YouTube content is shifting, but I will shoot these, you know, unforgivably long videos and extract key moments and publish onto TikTok and Instagram.

Um, so for example, let's deconstruct this into four x structure. This video was 2021 Latter half prediction. So. What is a four x structure here? The dream is, you know, people want to finish their half of the, their latter half the year on a strong note, right? Like, why else would anybody watch this? They wanna watch this just to make sure that, you know, the, the second half of the year is not gonna be shitty.

And if it is, give 'em the heads up so they can like prevent it, right? So the nightmare is a tumultuous 2021. The obstacle is personal struggles. 'cause we're all human, we all have stuff going on, so that's gonna get in the way of their dreams. And so my job is to literally show them like, Hey there, these are things.

You could look forward to. And these are ways to like mitigate a potential, um, obstacle that's coming down the pipeline. And my hook, my, my secret hook here, and I'm so surprised that other YouTuber or other TE YouTubers are not doing this. I have, if you guys know somebody who's doing this, let me know, but I have not.

But I also think it's because they were doing it with like Vimeo and Patreon. Um. But my hook is if you want a deeper reading of this, of this path that you're on, be a member. So someone is like knee deep interviewing my video and they're like, well, I want more now. So they like immediately sign up to your member.

Right. That's creating urgency using the second hook. So it's not that other YouTubers don't do this. I've seen, I'm talking about terror YouTubers because a lot of YouTubers have memberships, but other tar YouTubers, I think before the membership rolled out, they were using like Patreon or Vimeo to do that.

But again. People leave, um, the current site, right? And they go to external site to set up. So that's going to lose conversion along the way. All righty. Another example, impact Theory. Who's familiar with these guys?

So, uh, it was discovered by, well, it was founded by Tom biu. He's a founder of Quest Nutrition, the energy bar. Uh, he's a billionaire now, and now he's starting like a content business, right? And his whole thing's about motivational speech, how to improve yourself, personal development and all that. Um, I've been following his content for quite some time and I was trying to examine his content strategy.

Not that different from what I do. He has a long form YouTube video. Uploads it as an as a podcast onto Spotify, so he'll shoot this once. This is how he batches. He'll shoot this once in a YouTube format, extract the audio, upload to Spotify, and then extract heat clips from the YouTube upload onto Instagram.

He's not on TikTok yet. Maybe he is. I don't know. I haven't seen him, but I would imagine if he did have TikTok, he would just upload whatever he is uploading on. Instagram, there are like native formats. Sure. Like, you know, you look at a video and you're like, oh, this is TikTok, this is Instagram. Sure there is native formats.

Um, but if, like I said, if you attended the masterclass few days ago, I think that's a pr what we, the setup that we talked about. I think it's a pretty neutral like platform neutral way to shoot things.

So, um, refer back to that. Yeah, impact theory, same thing. They structure all their content into four act structure. The hook always is to direct the audience to the speaker's social media, or to enroll in the impact theory school. So I'm talking about the second hook. All, all of Tom Bill's content is about becoming a member at, at their impact theory school or to go follow the speaker, social media content, um, or platform.

So call to action is a better way to say this.

Yeah. And um, at this point, I'm just repeating myself, but you can grab material from your lectures, PDFs, podcasts, and turn into video or post. It's not about being fancy, it's about keeping your audience updated and informed. I also screenshot my lives. So if someone has given me a shout out or feedback during my live, like, oh, hate you, like this thing was so awesome, I'll screenshot that and I'll upload it onto other platforms and that works like magic.

Alrighty, so that is the conclusion of the Empress module. Thank you for listening and. Let's go into sharing each other's content. Well, first of all, any questions about what we covered so far? No. Okay. Pretty straightforward, right? Awesome. Great. I.
