Timeless Short Video Strategy (Video Transcript - Content Creation)

Welcome to Timeless Short Video Strategy Workshop. This is something that people don't realize how important it is, and some of the best contents I've seen, whether or not they would like to admit it, practices these principles behind the scenes. So I'm sort of showing you guys the, the underneath the hood, like filming techniques and video techniques that you can use to.

Like really amplify the quality of your videos. And notice it says short video, so it also will be really tailored towards like a 32nd, 62nd video format. So basically taking the, the qualities of like a film, like a proper 60 minute, 90 minute like film feature and applying it to like a short video format.

So that you come across super high quality but is also engaging. So, um, just really quickly, why content matters right now, it's, it's, uh, it costs 62% less than traditional marketing and generates about three times as many leads. Many of you guys are probably familiar with the statistics because this was from the Fool module, and if you're not a part of the business growth class, then this is probably brand new, but it's a good FYI for you.

Content is free ads and companies that put their primary focus on content marketing increases their website conversion rates by almost five x. So whatever short form videos that you do decide to make during this class or in general in your free time, you know, think about making it professional so that you can put it into your website, right?

That's gonna, that's going to be, um, people staying on your website for a few extra more seconds. Video is trusted by 40% of the millennials and half of those are aged between 18 to 34. Uh, I would not focus on the age there if, especially if target demographic that's outside of that scope. But this is sort of very popular by, uh, gen Z and the millennials.

That's what this statistic is trying to say. And as time goes by, video will take up most of ad. Form that it's only gonna increase. So just keep that in mind. So once again, if your, if your dream and your hope is to have a strong online business presence, video is an incredible strategy to deploy, to increase traffic and leads.

The other thing is as a spiritualist and someone that teaches spirituality, I'm also hyper-focused on how energy has transformed over time and by energy. What I mean by that is how we communicate given, receive information. It used to be two dimensional, right? Text drawing, caveman style like fingerprinting.

Finger painting. And then, um, we introduced depth sculpture buildings, 3D Art. We're in the age of four D so this is where audio and video comes in. The other reason why, um, we're in the 40 D stage is because when you watch a movie, you can fast forward or rewind a movie, right? You can control time. That's the four dimensional aspect as well.

So we're very much living in the era right now. And um, 3D communication form is just a little too dense. I would even argue billboards are not as effective as it used to be because it's not, uh, it doesn't have the audio component, it just takes up real estate space. You drive past it, you'll forget about it, right?

There's no way to like rewind and watch stuff. Great. So the other reason why you need to step up your content game is because there's an explosion of video content. How many of you guys watch at least. 30 minutes of videos a day, whether it's Instagram, TikTok, YouTube. Okay. That's pretty much everybody, right?

Um, because of that, the audience that's all of us have decreased in our attention span dramatically. Um, and the inundation of experts, quote unquote, and I put that in quotations because there's a ton of experts out there who claim that they know what they're talking about. They really don't, but they seem like.

Catchy or charismatic and are able to hook you in. So because of this explosion of information, good or bad, and also the reduction of audience's attention span, it's become really important to double down on your video quality and information quality. I wanna make it very clear. Video quality is not expensive equipment, it's not crazy effects, it's not licensed music, et cetera.

It's, it's really, really not, if you have those things, great, it, it's going an extra mile and it'll help you. Not necessary at all. Um, I've seen. Videos embedded in ClickFunnels. I've seen videos embedded in some like really high budget marketing campaigns that surprisingly have very low quality videos, and they do just as fine in terms of conversion.

Here's what video quality is. Video quality is general look and feel. So when someone first scrolls and comes across your video, the first three seconds of like how they feel about your video, your presence. So you as a person, right, like you, like how do you convey yourself? Uh, signaling professionalism?

That does matter, by the way. So by professionalism, I don't mean like being in a suit and tie. Uh, it just means that you know what you're talking about and you, you guys don't know the phrase. Fake it. Fake it till you make it. I don't recommend that at all. Obviously, like, know your stuff. But I do think it says something about like, can people feel that you're legit?

That is a component of professionalism, no excess space. We're gonna talk about that later. No excess space means do you start recording yourself and just go silent for like 15 seconds for no reason, right? You don't remember. We're talking about 32nd videos here. Um, it needs to be packed with stuff. It cannot be.

People usually watch the first five seconds and then they decide if they wanna watch the rest or not, by the way. So, um. Should, they should get a return on the 30 seconds that they're, that they're spending like watching your video essentially. So there, there can't be any like gaps, information quality, what is it?

So it's not giving as much information as you can. Who's guilty of this? Who's guilty of this when making content where you just give the audience a bunch information? 'cause you're like, oh, I have to educate them as much as I can in 30 seconds. I'm guilty of this. I'll be the first admit, but that doesn't mean quality.

Um, also not coming across lofty or formal. That's also not quality. I'm also guilty of this. Um, so what is information quality? It's aiming to educate or entertain the viewer with intentional, deliberate words, sounds, visuals, so everything you say, um, everything the audience sees. Should have some kind of purpose or intention behind it that's tied to education or enter entertainment.

Awesome. So let's go into three keys to high quality video. Uh, we're gonna spend some time this hour, talk about going deep into these three keys, and then we're gonna, um, open the floor for some q and a. So here are the three keys, lighting, ankle, and frame, text and structure. Uh, these are things that I learned, not the last point, but the first two points I learned in film school.

And thank God for iPhones. 'cause you try to control these things with real like cameras. My gosh, it, you wanna pull your hair out. It's actually very difficult. Very, very difficult. So I think. It's a lot of my film school peers who thought that they'd be making feature films are just kind of upset at the fact that TikTok and Snapchat and all these other platforms are on the rise.

And they're like, but I spent all this money on film school. And What do you mean there's like no feature films being made anymore or people are not watching it, whatever. Right. So, so use this to your full advantage. Let's talk about lighting. So lighting controls the mood and tone of your video. There are three specific lights that you can focus on.

One is key light. Key light is intense. It puts direct bright light on your face and makes you the focal point. Can anybody guess what light this is? We all have it? Yes. Ring light. Ring light or like if you're in front of the window, like right now behind me, if I were to film right in front of that, that would be key light.

That works just as well. Fill light if you, we have the key light, and then if we add the fill light, it creates a softer tone. So for example, if you, right, right now, if you're watching me, there is key light on the left side of my face. You can see this part of my face, like kind of like bright, right?

Because like the sunshine is like hitting directly on it. And it's creating all this shadow on different parts of my face. So feel light is when I bring a lamp or a different ring light, whatever, and position it in a way that can like counteract the key light. So if the key light is too strong, you introduce the fill light, feel light, and it gets rid of the shadow created by the key light, therefore softening your features.

Now the backlight, um, softens the outline of you so it separates you from the background and creates like a halo effect around you. And we're gonna see examples of this. So for the vast majority of us, we're just gonna use the center one, fill light, plus a key light. And many of my videos, you're gonna see me with a ring light and there's like a lamp behind me.

And because my, my space is so small, the lights bounce off the walls and the walls act like a fill light.

Now this is really important. Remember, because it controls the mood and the tone mood, and the cont the tone of your video. So how do we do it, uh, in this specific scene? Who knows this movie? Yeah. Amelia. Yep. So, uh, you can see the, the shiniest part of her face. That was a, that was using the key light only.

Obviously, they were not using the ring light, but for our purposes, let's just imagine they were using the ring light or the daylight. They had some light fixture here, uh, where they added the fill light. You guys see this like soft, like whiteness on her face, but when there's like a shadow here, they probably put some kind of like, like mini light.

On the other side of her face, right, exactly. Something that bounced off the light to, uh, soften the shadow. And then a back light. You guys see a white light over here too to create, um, some distance between her and the background. But once again, for our purposes, you guys don't need three lights. You really don't.

And if you want to talk about intense stuff, high stake stuff, using key light alone is okay too. So pro tip, think of Keylight as where you want your focus to be. It's recommended for beauty videos or when you're covering intense subjects. There's a reason why makeup artists and beauty gurus like their whole face up with a big ass ring light.

There's a reason why you can see their whole pores is because their face is literally their product. So that's where they want their key light to be. Or when they're doing promo videos for like products or whatever, like concealers or foundations. In this particular scenario, the key light, this isn't from Blade Runner, the key light is on the right side of her face.

Um, so this was, I mean, we're gonna go into framing and all that 'cause there's multiple components of this video. But for this par particular scene, the director or the DP deliberately wanted the key light to be on the right side of her face because that's where he wanted the light to be focused.

Probably the cigarette and the shadow of the cigarette and all that backlight, backlight creates an ominous and mysterious effect. So there was a huge viral trend going around TikTok for a while last year. Silhouettes, um, who, who remembers silhouettes using Doja cats? Yeah, that was a classic backlight kind of trend.

There were actual filters created, um, that automatically put or filmed the viewer in like this kind of back lighty mood. But before that filter came to be, I, I'm pretty sure that's how people did it, like in a dark room. Um, put the, put the light behind them, use a red filter or something like that. So obviously if you wanna be taken seriously, I do not recommend.

Using backlight only because that's reserved for horror movies. Let's just put it that way. So pro tip number two, um, on your phone, you can control the lighting by focus lighting, plus focus by tapping on your screen when you're shooting and dragging the light up and down. I don't know if you guys know this tip, but every time you shoot your TikTok video and every time you move the lights around, the focus will be out outta whack again.

Just click on your own face and drag the lighting up and down so that after you move the lights, you're kind of back into your original intention of what you want the mood to be. Now, let's go into angle and frame. Very important, very, very important. Angle, signals, authority, and relatability of the speaker frame, conveys or creates emotion.

Remember conveys or creates emotion. So like I said, angle signals authority or, or relatability of the speaker. Um, the very basic angle is eye level, right? Like right now we're at eye level. I, I think, well, most of us are, and it signals neutrality. I really like eye level because it brings a humanity out of the speaker.

It's relatable. It's like we're just, it just feels like we're talking, right? Having a conversation. Uh, and then there's low angle. Low angle is like authoritative. It's it, low angle is when I'm looking down at the camera. So it creates, if you use it correctly, it does create like a trustworthy effect. Um, but when used too extremely, it can be off-putting.

It can feel patronizing. Then there is high angle, which could create, uh, some level of uncertainty. So high angle is when you're looking up at the camera. So from your audience's point of view, they're looking down at you. So it can, it, I mean this is actually a pretty creative angle. It can convey a wide range of like speculative emotions, such as uncertainty, confusion, or wonder for example, like if you're looking up at the sky, it's like a sense of wonder, right?

So it can create those effects, but once again, depending on what you're talking about, it may not be the best angle to use. I think the safest bed is eye level how to do it. This is what an eye level looks like. Um, you can adjust your ring light height. To match your eye level, and you can face the phone directly.

You can obviously like play around with it, you know, adjust your equipment up and down until you feel like the ca, like you fit in the frame of the camera and you're looking straight into it. High angle is when you're looking down at the camera to signal like, I'm an authority. So this is a scene from the Matrix.

Um, make your ring light, short point the phone upward, low angle. Is when the, the ring light is tall, you can be sitting down, by the way. So as long as a ring light is like, kind of taller than your eye level and the phone is pointing down, that's create, that creates a low angle. And once again, it could create a sense of wonder and curiosity, but it can also signal confusion.

Um, when you are, for example, if you're watching a crime movie, um, let's just say that the victim runs and like falls, right? Usually the low angle is deployed to show them like on the floor. So, um, I like to use eye level a lot, sometimes high angle, uh, and sometimes low angle, but that's probably the most rare framing.

Who recognizes this scene from what TV show? Yes. Ej? Yep. Yep. It's um. Yes, exactly. So framing, once again, very important. You may think, oh, but it's just a phone. How much could it actually like show or not show A lot. I mean, TikTok videos are full body, right? Wide shot or medium wide shot typically shot, you know, for dancers.

'cause they wanna show their entire movement when they're trying to, you know, get more dance students or something like that. Medium shot, um, pretty solid framework to convey your emotions and thoughts without distracting the audience, right? They're not seeing your lower body, they're not seeing, um, all this crazy environment background stuff.

Once again, if you tap on your screen and do focus, it will blow up the background on your iPhone, so you can see that the background here is a bit blurred. Medium shot is great for. Allowing the audience to just focus on what you're saying, to just focus on what it's you're trying to convey. Medium closeup is, I mean, it's just basically getting closer and it starts to convey emotions.

This is where you start to create emotions for the audience. However, depending on what you're saying, it could start to get distracting. I, by the way, pur purposefully very intentionally. I toggle back and forth between medium shot and medium closeup a lot, and when I use medium closeup or even closeup, it's when I'm trying to signal urgency.

Um, and that's a very, very deliberate choice that I make whenever I'm trying to say something really high stakes. Like, Hey guys, it's so important. Like, if you don't know this right now, you're gonna be like so screwed. When I'm trying to convey that level of like high tension stuff, I bring the camera or the phone closer to me, um, so that people are like, whoa, holy shit.

As soon as they like, come across my video. Extreme closeup, I mean, like I said, crescendo over motions. If you are a very creative content creator and you're telling some sort of beautiful story in like a 32nd format, great. Deploy this, use this. Do I do this now? But, but again, it depends on what you're doing.

If you're doing some kind of cool trend, you know, there was a trend going around where people wanted to test. Their eye colors, how it looks like in natural lighting versus back using the back of the camera, whatever. They, for a while, they did this extreme closeup just to show how their eye colors change 'cause they were following a trend.

Last but not least, text structure. This is unique to short videos only obviously in cinema or in like movies. They, they don't do this, so this is unique to us. Why do some unstructured or unprofessional contents go viral, right? Like from, especially from the Vine Lee days. Why do some of them go viral? It just makes no sense.

The common denominator is that there's always some kind of shock value. If something goes viral, it's, it's because it's people. People did not expect that. That's why. So we talked about education or entertainment, right? That's a very common theme, but something that strings those two concepts together as well is shock value.

It's educ, it's educational, but it's shocking. It's entertaining, but it's shocking. So you can turn on the camera and just speak freely and wing it, hopefully, and hopefully it will land and shock some viewers. Or you can leverage structure to engineer shock factor. And once again, in the, in the business world class, if you, uh, take a look at the empress module, you are going to, we're gonna go deeper into the structure, right?

And kind of go behind, like go deeper into the film theory. But for the purpose of this presentation, I want to show you guys, um, like the shorthand for using and implementing the structure. So remember, your goal is to keep the audience engaged with what you know. Um, the best way to do this in a short period of time is to promise information upfront, but don't tell 'em the whole thing in the first five seconds, but promise them something.

Then structure that information in short, digestible pieces, like almost like in a drip way, and having texts underscores key points. And engages the audience. I know this sounds obvious and I know it sounds like, duh. I can't tell you how many times I see people like get this wrong. They will just say a bunch of stuff and they'll like either caption it or type it out in like a really long text.

I used to do this by the way. I used to be like, oh my God, just set these five amazing points. Let me just like really bring it home and like write it all out and like put it on the screen. People, people just get lost. 'cause what? What do they do? They, do they listen to you or do they read the text like they can't do both?

You know, they get confused. Right? So the key is to get people to be listening to you, but in text format, say the buzzwords. Kind of like leads them down the rabbit, the rabbit hole. So how do we do this? And in case you're wondering like, how do I do this in like a 15 second? You can absolutely do this in a 15 second video.

So first the hook. Remember you want it to be shocking, right? Did you know or this is wrong? Putting the stake in the ground, the truth about yada, yada, yada.

So I really should have mentioned the word shock, but, but if you don't like the term hook, the other way to think about it is like what's gonna be shocking for the audience, right? That's key. And then you show 'em the incentive. Make sure you stay till the end to find out about X, Y, ZI. I used to take this for granted.

Literally. I used to think, oh, that's not gonna do anything. People are not dumb. I swear my view rate and like rate went up like fivefold after I started putting this basic stuff out there. It was so insane. Like people actually listen to your instructions. If you're like, stay till the end, they're like, okay.

They really do. There's a way, there's a way to combine the two, two in one as an X, Y, Z expert. Here are the biggest mistakes I see.

It accomplishes two things. Um, they're hooked because they wanna learn what this mistake is. 'cause they're like, well I wanna avoid that. So that's the hook. The incentive is you're the expert. So they're like, great, this person, this expert's gonna gimme a solution. So we can always like nest two um, methods into one.

You can nest the hook and then set them into one. And if you're like, I don't have ideas right now, that's fine. Do the hook plus incentive. I put three points. 'cause from what I've seen, people really can't handle more than three. But you can obviously put in five points, two points, six points. Um, but as you start to go into your points or ideas, bullet point them out when you speak.

So when you say bullet 0.1 or or tip number one, um, list the tip number one on the top of the screen. I should have made a a slide for this, but I'm just gonna verbally say it. When you put texts, by the way. Put it like somewhere slightly above your forehead. Also never put text to very bottom or to your very right.

Basically like, like keep the text out of the edge of the video. 'cause guess what? Um, the TikTok logo plus sign your handle name, the caption, all of that will like cover your text. So finally, CTA. To prevent this, um, fall for part two, right? You're the expert. You just put a stake in the ground. You said what you had to say, or for more click the plus sign.

So this is also shocking. This is also an opportunity to leverage or insert shocking points because then people are like, wait, you just drop this truth bomb on me, and there's more, you're saying there's a solution. In the Empress, we talked about, um, the four act structure, right? How the fourth act can be a dream or a nightmare, like a new dream or a nightmare.

Both are equally shocking for the viewer, by the way, and you're basically pro promising them that so often. Oftentimes, I. I feel like I see too many creators either give too much information up front and then people are like, okay, I got what I need, and just exit. Or they're able to stay till the end when they're like, oh, that was great.

Awesome. And like not, they don't feel the incentive to follow the speaker. So here's some examples, and this is also a good opportunity to look at the shots, um, angles and frames and whatnot. So I, my content has changed a lot over the years, not over the years, over the past year and the way I structure things have changed quite a bit, but few things remain the same.

The hook, right? This is my, uh, hook number two. This will shock you. Literally. I even, like, I just spell out, this will shock you. I'll, I'll be that literal and people will believe it. Um, also I want to engage people, so I'll ask people things like, you know, this has happened to you, or what's your story? Like?

I made a video about the Matrix and I asked the audience like, what's your lady in the red dress? And I had this whole video talking about one theory, but I needed to, I needed to summarize it. This is great by the way. If you have Pisces Mercury, if you have Pisces Mercury like me, and you tend to ramble or you tend to say a bunch of stuff and you're like, okay, you know what, I, I need to, I need a way to like summarize this for people.

Just, but like write two words that sums up what you're trying to say. This video, I did not put any, I didn't say anything, however, I just simply pointed at the key things that I was trying to say. This is another way to do things. If you're like, this is overwhelming. I can't do this whole structure thing.

I can't talk, well, it still has the call to action and the hook, the shock value is that there's a connection between business and spirituality, right? Most people don't even think of it that way. So that's the hook. 'cause we're like, wait, there's a connection and then here's my three points, 1, 2, 3, the way they connect. And then I'm like, look, there's more.

So you guys, you guys see how there's like ways to like embed the structure in various formats without much effort? Yeah. Um, and click and click the plus sign for, for three skills. I want everybody to say, click the plus sign or follow four. You know, be, be very explicit. Like ask for what it is you want and.

Um, so this one is what I was talking about, ej. This is the one where I zoomed in a little bit after sitting far back from the camera and it captures my upper body and there's some space on top, and I'm always in the center. These three videos that you guys see in the front, they're the, they're, they're medium closeups, um, to convey emotion.

And guess what? Each of these things were like highly emotional videos. But anything else, like, I try to, like say back a little bit, um, ej did this answer your question about the, the shot or angle thing? I feel like there was, I feel like I might have been a bit confusing. Nope. It was crystal clear to me.

I'm good. Okay, great. I know photography is like, its, its whole like own like world that has a lot of. Rules and stuff. Um, photography and film are very, are, are very different, but very, not different. They just use different terminology. But in terms of manipulating lenses or like changing, um, f stops, like, or exposure, which you just showed us, like being able to manipulate the exposure in the, you know, in the frame, uh, that works in film and in, and in, in, like, those things are, are aligned.

Awesome. Great. So there's like a shorthand for you guys. Yeah. So jump in. I, I feel like, I feel like with this whole thing, you can be as simple or as complex as you want. Yeah. So like, ej, you already have these amazing skills like photography and like I did a little bit of photography too. So I feel like if you know that, then yeah, you can do.

A style, a like a visual style that is completely unique to you that no one else could replicate. And every time they see your video they're like, oh, this girl, I don't know why I like this video, but there's like a reason why. And you know what I didn't even realize? Sorry. I just like had this revelation where while we were going through this module, I was like, oh my God.

That is why I follow this particular person, because I love the way that they do the backlighting and they set up the story and the way that they do the angles. I was like, uh, duh. It was so like, duh. But I'm, yeah. This is great. Thank you. I, I need this refresher for myself quite frequently because when you make content, you tend to forget, you know, you tend to forget the basics and you're like, oh wait, actually there, there's a formula to these things.

And there's a reason why some people, it's a lot of it's psychology. There's a reason why people are like, drawn to certain creators, to your point, or drawn to certain scenes. Um. I was, uh, when I was sifting through examples, like I found images of, uh, the Joker, like sees from the Joker where the joker was like looking down quite often.

Um, and it was like creating this like o with, with like a bunch of back light. It was creating this ominous, like very like scary effect, things like that. Any other questions, comments? I'll jump in again. This whole module explains why I decided in my mind to do a particular, okay, so my series, what is, was, um, how your spiritual healer is not your therapist.

And so I wanted to go like full out, dramatic in your face, and I couldn't figure out why I wanted to do that, but um, I wanted to use like that one Phantom of the Opera sound like it just get really dramatic. Again, I have to like double check to see if this is gonna work, but part of me wanted to use like that soundbite and then.

Still looking down, like initially I'll start looking at them in that neutral frame of mind. Like your spiritual, uh, healer is not your therapist. And then dun, dun, dun, dun, and then looking down at them like, Hey, I'm talking to you. And I was like, I think that this module explained why I wanted to be so like, I don't know, in their face.

It's all, it's all subconscious. There's, you know, there are certain things that we mimic and we do because we know it's gonna signal certain things. Totally cool. It feels like a, a body like right in front of you. And there's, and there, I mean, typically those are just clips grabbed from like a YouTube video or documentary style.

But the reason why I like that kind of connecting to what you said, Alessandra, is because that, that speakers usually is on stage. So they're already pretty elevated, but it's full body. So you feel like you're in like part of the audience, like watching that person. So like, you don't feel like you're being spoken to like right now, like these examples, not one-on-one, but you feel like you're in the room and that conference 'cause you can see that person full body.

But that, but that's usually like taken from like parts of like, you know, like a documentary style video. Who else, who else is going to, um, what, what else are you guys gonna adjust after this module, if any? Definitely for me, the text location. When you said move the text up, I didn't really think about how up, so I'm gonna try moving my text up there.

Um, as, as a way I have been, I don't know if you've seen kind of all the stuff I'm doing or some of it or whatever, but I've been trying completely different. Things and like a mix. Um, since I was away and stuck in a hotel room, I had plenty of time to like mess around and get started, and I made a bunch of different videos to kind of decide what I wanted to do.

To do. 'cause I was just in my room bored and I had a clean sink to do that trend where you look at your bathroom sink and then dance in the mirror. I know I didn't switch it to the guy, but it wasn't about that. So I didn't do that. But yeah, you know, like just the audio was viral. That's important. Yeah.

So, yeah. Mm-hmm. So I'm trying to do a combination of like really looking for, and because it's a new account, um, really trying to align the stuff on my for you page to be the kinds of content that aligns with what I'm doing. So, um, I'm purposely liking things that are looking for hashtags and liking things, and that worked really quickly.

Like I'm really surprised this second time around making another. TikTok account. My first one was like affiliate marketing and all these like be bullshit side hustles that were like affiliate marketing and drop shipping and just so much garbage. And I, it took me such a long time to figure it out. But this second time around, like with this account, like I made sure that I'm following and if you look through my followers, like they're people that like.

I'm cool with you seeing that I follow them from this account. Mm-hmm. So I'm really glad I had the lurker account to learn all that. I feel like if I didn't start fresh, um, I'm also feel like even though I'm not getting a ton of views, um, you know, it's still really new. And that's okay. Your first way.

You got some views. Yeah, I'm getting, um, let's see. The very first one, I got like 500 plus views on that very first one. Um, the other ones are like around a hundred ish, some lower, some higher, but there, but I'm posting three times a day. It's only been a few days. Um, I'm doing like a, and I'm, I'm trying to get my website done, um, so that I have things to point people to.

Um, and I already started writing my first course. Um, and I have another question that's not related to this. I don't know if you want us to stick to just Yeah, let's stick to the, to this topic for now topic. Um, but, but yeah, I've been messing with The other thing that um, I'd love to get your thoughts on is something I did that I had read, I don't know if it was on this in our course or somewhere else, is I'm trying to make sure that I label them all.

So if someone looks at my content, um, there's a couple that aren't. I just aesthetically just chose not to do those two. But, um, where it says what it is, so you can go and like, like you, it has like a theme or you know what, it's, it is, so it's not just a video on the screen and I don't know what your thoughts are on Yeah, those are, yeah, those, the, the, okay.

So a couple of things. If we just wanna do, um, a deep dive into not deep dive, if we wanna do like a high level TikTok strategy. Session. The, the cover pages really recommend so that people can follow you for more like various parts, right? The cover will say part 1, 2, 3 for virality if, okay, so two things I would pay attention to.

I would search, remember how I told you guys like search competitors within TikTok or wherever platform if you are. Competitor is a spiritual advisor or a business coach. Search that business coach or a spiritual business coach. Mm-hmm. And look up the most viral video in terms of user likes. Go into that video and look at their hashtags.

What do they, what do they use as hashtags? And don't look at the video from like two years ago, like, look at one as recent as possible because that those hashtags are going to be what you have to use to capture their audience. So, and another really powerful exercise of this is that when you do the keyword search, you might come across videos where you're like, oh shit.

Uh, I actually really don't want this business at all because the people who are speaking about it are not my direct competitors, but they just happen to use the same label as me. I can't be on this brand. So it will make you, um, research and look up different keywords that fit your business better and then look within viral videos more.

And then you can study those videos. Like, yeah, what's the structure there? What kind of hooks do they use? But the biggest thing here is hashtag So, so once again, like ej, I dunno if you've done this, um, but look at the most viral videos that your competitors have made. Recycle their hashtags. Okay. And then the trending audio's terrific.

Keep doing that. And then Michelle had a question about this separately posting times. So this is a bit industry specific, I would say, however. I think that like people try to like publish like, oh post at this time it's gonna be the most beneficial, blah, blah. I personally think it's always the same. I don't think it changes that much.

It's always sometime at the am always some, anytime between 10:00 AM to 12:00 PM anytime between three to 5:00 PM anytime between or after 7:30 PM local time. Um, so I would. Try to post at those times. And if you are covering topics like mental health, spirituality, wellness, um, guess what? People feel some type of way.

At the end of the day, they're exhausted. So those types of contents do tend to do really well After nine o'clock, if you're like a yoga person and you like to do like morning yoga practices, then yeah, try to post that ASAP in the morning. Michelle, does that answer your question? Yeah, that was helpful.

Okay, great. This is where, um, yeah, I was going to cover this more specifically later on, but I think that unfortunately with something like TikTok, there needs to be a ton of AB testing and looking through competitor content and see what they do. And that it's not to copy them, it's just, it's just to follow the crowd.

It's just to follow the, the, the market where the demand is. Great questions though. The other thing I wanna say is there are videos that go viral every day without the trend. So do the trend if you would like, but don't put so much pressure on yourself to be like, I have to do this to go viral. There's, keep in mind the, the, the trending videos were not always trending at first.

The viral videos were not always viral. At first, somebody made it viral, and that could be you if you come with your own thing. Okay. It's so true. Can I, can I jump in? Yes, please. So I also do the same thing where I'll just, I've been doing this for years though. Where I'll, where I'll scroll through through videos and be like, why is this so popular?

What is it? And the thing that I personally noticed is that when you put two really, really random things together. Somehow it sparks some sort of like, I don't know, some sort of like, whoa. All of a sudden it's like so many views on this one video just because someone decided to, to put two random things together.

It's not just like objects, for example, you know, like this and this. It's like it's topics as well. Things you would've Oh, yeah. Mm-hmm. Like things you would've never thought to go together. Yeah, that's a good point. Yeah. Right. This is where stitching, that's another great strategy. Stitching and dueting and green screening, those three things.

Um, actually like I have a green screen tutorial going out this afternoon for you guys. The green screen duet stitching. Definitely make that part of your core strategy to do exactly what Alessandro said. Reaction to your competitor reaction to common malpractices. Laura and I talked about this yesterday, right Laura?

We talked about how you find other dating coaches or relationship experts within your field and TikTok do what them stitch and say, this is bullshit. That's really shocking for you. By the way, people are always shocked when experts debate each other. They're like, wait, people disagree? Oh yeah, all the time.

So that's a really easy way to, um, go viral, especially if you're the type of person that does that does well. If you just talk no, like no structure, no format, whatever, you just have raw, unfiltered, powerful opinions. Stitching is great for that 'cause someone else is hooking for you. So easy. I think you would do really well with stitches, by the way.

Reaction videos. Those are fun. I'm down for that. Yeah, I do post on my personal account. They're really fun.

Yeah, I can see like totally destroying someone BA like, because their opinion just doesn't, isn't good. Oh, so you're saying Stitch not duet, like you know, don't do this. You can watch that video if you want, but don't do this. Here's what need to do. Yes. Oh, that would be fun. I should totally do that. I think you would crush at that.

Yeah, I'm down to do that. I just don't wanna be insulting or negative. Like I wanna make sure that, um, if I do that, um, I don't wanna full dis where I get into some sort of TikTok war with someone else or, uh, I just, I wanna be mindful of not fully bullying or being a full jerk. I don't know if anybody would think that.

I just have to Yeah. I mean, I, I can go there. I, I, I know how to go there. I, I, I, the New York bitch is still in me, so I think, I think the other thing you can do is say like, okay, that was great, but here's how we can get more, or how we can do Yeah, no, I, yeah, yeah. Unless it's really bad advice, which there's so much.

Exactly, so, so if, if you have a hard time finding what's shocking, um, use other people's videos as like a shock factor. Yeah, no, definitely. I mean, it'll be a lot easier to do to, like, dudes, there's a lot of dudes on this app who are like 20 years old, do like, think they know business. I'm like, this is, you know, and I'm like, that's not true.

So I do definitely yell at yell at my screen. I could do that. Right. And also green screen, um. At some point, I would love to see every single one of you guys do green screen. Um, you can green screen your website, you can green screen your offering. You can green screen your Instagram. You can green screen a movie clip.

There's so many things you can show in the background that highlights what it is you're trying to talk about or like to direct people. Like I, I love green screen for like showing people where they can like book me for stuff or, um, sometimes I. Green screen my own YouTube videos so that they know I'll have a YouTube channel.

Okay. Any other questions, comments, thoughts? Was this helpful?

Okay. Awesome. I'm glad to hear. I think what I want to do on Saturday, which I was gonna do anyway, but remember how each of you guys are supposed to bring three piece of content? By Saturday minimum. So part of the critique was to go through each content and look at everything, right? Look at the hashtags, look at the audio, look at the text, whatever.

You and you guys got a head start by like showing up today. And so that, like, you don't have like texts and the weird parts of the screen, um, and have to redo. But we will do a full diagnostic on like, okay, like what should we try to tweak for next week? And see how the metrics, uh, move. So we'll do that.

Cool. Okay. Well thank you for spending your precious, um, Thursday afternoon with me. Really, really productive time. Um, also really appreciate all the questions and the information exchange and I will send out this recording and presentation. Thank you so much. This was really helpful. Yay. Thank you. Take care and have an amazing rest of your time, you guys.

You too. Bye-bye.
