Launching with Planets (Video Transcript - Content Creation)

Hi everyone. Welcome to launching with the Planets. So when you are a business owner and you're launching a brand new product, whether it is digital or physical, uh, you want to have a plan and you want to have a framework that is repeatable because you're already putting so much energy and effort into making the product in of itself that the sales and marketing component should to the best of its abilities.

Uh, be automated. That's where funnels became very popular. That's where email marketing campaign strateg became really popular. That's where app ads became popular. And I'm here to tell you that, um, there are some tried and true methods and I want to sort of integrate that into this idea of following the stars.

Now, we're not gonna. Focus too much on following the stars in this, uh, masterclass. I'm gonna touch on it very, very briefly, like less than a minute. But overall, the intention of this masterclass is to give you the tried and true frameworks of how to launch. Meaning, like how to sell and market your product or service after you have create the, the product or service.

Um, and then also when you go live, like how to sell it effectively. So let's dive in. So before we dive into the patterns, let's take a look at two woowoo things. Like I said earlier, we're gonna touch upon this briefly, check in with the stars. So what do I mean by this? Um, you know, just be very mindful of what's going on, planetarily.

You know, if you are introduced to my product, if you're introduced to my content, you should have a basic understanding of. Sort of where the stars are currently transiting. I don't advise launching something during Mercury retrograde. Um, I don't advise. Launching something even before or after Mercury retrograde plus or minus two weeks.

Uh, it's not because it can't go well, even if you do launch, it's just that you have to do a lot of cleanup work. Um, because Mercury rules like the technological errors, right? Also Mars. Retrograde. I think that it's okay to launch things before retrogrades. It's just that when the retrograde actually happens, just expect there to be a lot of cleanups to do.

Like I just said, with Mercury retrograde, there might be a lot of informational corrections, relaunches edits and stuff like that. It may not affect your sales, but it will. It will affect the amount of time you put into correcting things and. For example, a Mars retrograde, you might, you might just feel sluggish afterwards.

You might have a really hard time like rallying people, um, unless you excel at selling, unless you excel at marketing and it's something that you like to do no matter what time of the year it is, and you have a solid product and it sell itself. So. Uh, for a process like this, I, I believe that if you establish this framework before the retrograde, it's something that you can rinse and repeat during the retrograde, whether it's Mercury or Mars or whatever.

Um, but when you're building a, a framework like this for the very first time, I would advise you to not do this. At the height of a planetarily, uh, bizarre season, I would also pay attention to the moon cycles. So we talk a lot about New Moon, uh, setting the intention. Correct. And Full Moon is about the wrap.

So I personally love launching new things, and by launching, I mean announcing new projects or products or ideas when it's New Moon, because that is like. Parallel to setting and intention during that time, whereas Full Moon is about, okay, that's probably when I try to get everybody in the door and have all the signups just completed, so.

I would just look out for these major sort of edge cases. Transits. I don't think you have to pay attention too much to like what goes on day to day, week to week. I would pay attention to those big transits and might be also worth looking at Jupiter Transits 'cause that is a, a planet of expansion and luck when it's transiting your 10th house or sixth house might not be a bad idea to, to really start digging deep into these frameworks.

And the other thing I wanna focus on, and yes, it is woo woo, uh, is to channel your biggest gift, which is your empathy. So why do I say that? Because the biggest sales I've ever made came from pitching from my heart, uh, not following some kind of script. So this is true, like, and I don't know how accidental this is or not, but when I look back at some of my numbers, I can see how like some of the most passionate.

Pitches or talks I've given to clients were when the biggest numbers came in, and that was completely decoupled from the script itself. That was pure emotion and that seemed to really work. So just know that if you have a really valuable product and you're solving for a really big promise for people, you can have total conviction in that and just leave with that.

That said, I also recognize that we're only human. So I'm only human and I can't drop into my heart about the same topic over and over again, and neither can you. So after you tap into your heart, you can codify that and that's really the intention of this entire deck. Like codify that and download by systematizing it into a script.

So that's what we're gonna go into. Uh, I'm a firm believer of like, yes, there are emotional creative Wu side of the business, you know, that feminine side, but we're really diving into the masculine here. The, the pattern mastery, the systems and infrastructure mastery. And that's equally important too. And, uh, if you add, if you judge it up with the planetary facts, it's it's chef's kiss.

However, I would say the planetary magic is like 20%. The empathy is like 20%. Just get that right upfront and the rest, let's focus on codifying it. Oh, and yeah, so trust me, people will feel your energy through a recorded class or pitch years later. This is what energy transfer is. I can't tell you how many times people to this day send me an email or text after.

Doing 21 days Majorana, like, you know, something that I produced like three years ago from like the bottom of my heart and I still get an email being like, oh my God, this class transformed my life. So just know that like whatever you put out, it kind of like encapsulates in time because right now I feel very differently about 21 days of Majorana.

But luckily people who watch my videos of that class back then, um, still feel the same strong emotional effect that I had about it back then. So believe in energy transfers. So, like I just said, launch itself is a science, meaning it's a pattern, uh, not a feeling, and a lot of very intuitive creative people really struggle with this.

So there are four phases to the scientific launch process. Um, and using this method, which I'm about to share with you guys, I have been able to make effortless, repeatable, profitable launches. And your job is to fit this four phase into, you know, email series. Live series social media campaigns. Um, it's the same script, just in different platforms.

And if you're like, what are the four faces? We're about to dive straight in. But the reason why I mentioned these different platforms is because what I'm about to show you, people often utilize it heavily on email only, and that's really not that necessary. Um, this four phase, you can slot it into Instagram stories, you can slot it into TikTok posts, you can slot into YouTube videos.

It doesn't have to be just emails. And quite frankly, I don't even know if I'm the biggest advocate of email marketing. Um, it's helped me out a lot, but I think that we've really evolved as, um, internet citizens over the years and we purchased through various channels, not just email, but the logic in and of itself still remains that, that's why I'm saying like, apply it in other platforms.

So here are the four phases. There's a pre-sale, um, then there's engagement, sale and post-sale nurturing. These four phases make up six weeks, and these are the exact same phases that I sort of prep my business growth students for. Um, they're each walkthrough the pre-sale, engagement, sale and post-sale nurturing.

But like I said, this masterclass is best if you already have a product and, um. A service planned out so that you know how to like proactively design these four phases. So presale is week one. This is when you decide on your course or service or product topic. Uh, by the way, for anyone who's watching this is really for digital product sellers, mostly.

You can do this for physical products too, but most of my students have been a digital product seller. So decide on your course topic and what problem it will solve for your students. So we're gonna get to slide 23. Later on, you're gonna see, decide on your course topic and figure out what problem you're gonna solve for your students.

That's really important. And also take a poll or interview your existing clients or friends. Write the course outline. Um, determine your course pricing. Yeah. So what do I mean by all this? Well, first of all, first and foremost, uh, slide 23 really talks about selling the vacation. So selling the vacation, meaning like what is the ideal dream end state for the client?

If you start thinking about like what ideal end state you want your students or your clients to have, then you can easily back it into, okay, what problem am I solving for? And you think that's easy, but hey, a lot of us. Initially come with products that we think are really cool, but doesn't really solve anybody else's problems.

So that's why I'm saying taking the time to interview your clients or your friends, take a poll. This is not about you. This is about the problem that you're solving for. And then based on that, write a course outline. I think people like dive straight to like trying to make slides or trying to design a product.

Like, no, no, no, like, like coherently. Put it like do pen to paper and like outline step by step exactly what it is, you know. What, what weak point exists in the industry that you're filling the gap in, and then you can determine the course pricing. Can you do all this in week one? I don't think it's like super realistic, but I've done it.

I've seen people do it. If you wanna lengthen this out to like week two, that's fine, but you should knock this outta the park as a very first pre-sale phase in week two. Um, this is a nice to have, not must have, especially if. You already have a website. I think that we live in a day and age where we don't even really need websites anymore, but for all intents and purposes, um, let's just focus on, you know, living under, living in a framework where like websites are necessary, right?

Set up your course website and customize a colors, fonts, logo, and URL. By the way, you could use a teaching website like Teachable Kajabi. Think afi, I use SamCart. Um, if anybody wants to check out SamCart, I have like a, like a link that you can use to get your free trial. So, yeah, a lot of these are very done for you platforms where you can upload your course and stuff like that.

And you can also like set up payment structures, one time payment, monthly payment donation based. Um, so after you determine your course pricing in week one, come back and do this in your week two, and also set up your sales page and tailor to the course outline. Um, so what does that mean? It's because like on the sales page, like people before, people like buy the course, they first wanna see what they're learning, right?

So that outline that you initially wrote, like. Dump it on the landing page. I mean, make it look nice, obviously. But like, you wanna give people the preview of like, the journey, the overall journey they'll be taking once they take your course and start thinking about hooks, call to actions and, um, create your thank you and checkout pages.

These are some things you guys like. I, I did. I, uh, if I can go back in time and do this properly, I would, because I spent so much time. Not thinking about the thank you and not thinking about the checkout pages, and I get like so embarrassed 'cause somebody would like purchase my product and be like. Hey, uh, as a thank you page, I have this like, automated message that's like, clearly not from you.

Just wanted to give you a heads up, and I'm like, humiliated, right? So it's like these little things that students and clients like really pay attention to. No matter how good your product is, if these little details are not buttoned up, people will absolutely notice it and your credibility will go down.

The other reason why I say start thinking about your hooks and and call to actions is because people, when they see your videos online, your marketing videos. Psychologically they're gonna be more likely to purchase your product if what you're seeing in the video matches the words that you say on your landing page.

So if I say a video like, Hey, like Bend your reality in under 90 days, or activate your dormant potential under 90 days, and they go to my website, they wanna see that exact language, or else I'm gonna be like, is this the same product? So. Once again, don't do what I did of like doing everything backwards because I made all these videos.

It didn't really tie to the product. I didn't have all these checkout pages and now like I had to spend a lot of time like bridging all those things. Now that's the first two weeks of your launch series. Now look at, let's look at engagement. So what do I mean by engagement? Um. Well, you first want to, so you wanna think about engagement as a way to like literally engage students or potential audience and start like making some noise at, in this stage though, you do wanna complete like your actual product or your actual deliverables.

So make sure it's like a buttoned up or almost complete in your teaching platform. Because what happens is we create all these landing pages and checkup pages and we're so excited to sell, right? And. Yeah, you have a product, but half the time it's in your head. It's not on a teaching platform yet, or it's not uploaded yet.

So make sure you button that up, it's actually there, and start creating a waiting list for your classes. Now, when I say a waiting list, I'm talking about email lists, so like MailChimp, active campaign, flow desk. There's lots of popular options these days, and I use Flow desk. Uh, that's another thing you can use a link for down below, but.

Yeah, so because here's the thing, you don't need to sell, like you don't need to sell until, okay. You can sell whenever you want, even if the product's not ready. So what does that mean? Even if behind the scenes you're still budding up your product, you can, you can still pre-sale. That's where this comes in.

So you can receive the money up front, and then the product drop drops and the seats and the class opens like people can enroll. So week three is a really great time to launch a wait list as you complete the classes behind the scenes. Week four, create your welcome video. This is optional, by the way. I have not had this.

Ever. I, I think I finally have a membership, but in reality I don't, I don't know. I, I, this was not necessary because I have so much video that like my face is plastered everywhere and in of itself, that's already a welcome video that people don't even really want at that point. But, um, hopefully, like if you already have a brand, you can bypass this, but if not, yes, I create a welcome video optional.

Um, the second option is to schedule a free webinar or a live date. This is something that I wish I did sooner. So what is this? This is. Planning very proactively is just like pick a day in the month and be like, okay, that's a day I wanna go live and like train people for free because that is a really good opt-in.

That's a really good way to get people in the door. They get a flavor or taste of how you operate and then decide to like purchase on the spot during the live. Don't do what I did once again where I kind of scramble last minute to and pick a live date, like randomly and I have like two days to talk about it.

No, like pick it a month in advance and like, you know, talk about it a lot leading up to it. And get those like people, like on your wait list that we just saw in the previous slide. Um, this is also a week when it's really a good idea to start documenting your process. So many healers and creative people, uh, and coaches are perfectionists and they don't wanna like show anything behind the scenes.

They don't wanna show their slides that are work in progress. They don't wanna show things that they might like change later or whatever. No, like people love real-time information updates. Don't be afraid to share screenshots of your slides, of your pictures of your. Um, what's in Canva, even like your teaching platform set up, like, don't be afraid to share that with your audience in the form of reels, stories, videos, even blogs.

Um, you'll be very surprised how forgiving people are and they, more than anything, they just wanna know, like what you're working on and they're curious. So, and for them along the way, that is actually the best way to ke keep people engaged in my experience. Okay, so now let's go into the sales process. So week five.

So this is when you officially promote and launch your course, and this is also when you launch your eight day email series. Dun, dun dun. Okay. This is also where you start doing social media drip. Now I know I just talked about how you should like document your process and like share it on social media.

This is now when you make a more official announcement, like, Hey, you guys have been seeing the behind the scenes of like my product or my course. Um, doors are open. You have this many days to sign up. This is, this is like the official announcement. Yeah, week five is kind of what I say, that that's why there's like this email logo.

This is when you officially like kind of drop your email series and just like blast it on social media as well. And hopefully by this point you still have some signups on the wait list for that free live right free live or webinar event date. So, and we're gonna go into the email series. So just hang, hang tight.

Um. So keep in mind they need to be, this is what I was just saying, they need to be directed to the waiting list you created in week three. So at this stage, you're probably gonna have like new signups and they're gonna start mingling with your old signups. That's fine. Just, just continue your efforts through the email, through the social media, and during the live or the free webinar.

Um, use a close method as a pitch to close the sale. Okay, so. This is when like real action starts to take place. We're gonna go through the email series and we're gonna go into the closed method like now. Um, but hopefully this gives you a good overview from week one to week six of like what to prioritize.

As you can see, week six is like really aggressive sales tactics and week five is like soft sales. Tax is when that really, when that release starts. Okay. So I think that if you're in the email marketing space, hopefully you've heard of Alex from Rosie. So, um. Because he's such an awesome entrepreneur.

He's not even just an awesome entrepreneur. He's a great teacher. So I would also really highly encourage like look him up. He teaches this thing called the closed framework. He's done a lot of live sales, like in-person sales. Live sales. Gosh, like live sales are, I can sell digitally. No problem. I can't imagine like calling someone on the phone or, although I've done that, I can't imagine like going door to door and like selling, but he's done that many, many times and I have so much respect for him.

So close is C-L-O-S-E, and this is what they stand for. C is clarify why, why the prospect is there. So what that, what does that mean? Literally, like tell the customer, tell the audience like why they're there. Why, why do they show up on your live? And that's why I have this live button, because hopefully you've selected a live date in advance.

You host a live and people show up and you're giving them a free training, but you're gonna launch this closed framework to get 'em to actually like convert and buy something else during the live. So during the live, you're gonna remind your audience why they're there. I do this all the time. I, you know, every single Full Moon Live or, you know, monthly forecast, I'm always selling something and I always tell them why they're there.

Like, they want clarity in their lives that they're not getting from anywhere else. There's a lot of confusion. Maybe they're torn with what kind of decision they should make. Um, so remind them why they showed up, because believe it or not, they don't, people don't always know what they need, even though they like, gravitate towards you and then label the problem.

So, okay. Why are they here to solve what issue? Like clearly speak the language and, and label with the proper diagnosis and then overview their pain. So what does that mean? It's like overview everything that they've tried in the past and still didn't get the results that they want. What, who are my competitors?

Do they go to my competitors? Why do they not get their needs met? Was a life too short? Was a product, crappy Was um. Was it too like hands off and not hands-on? 'cause I'm relatively hands-on instructor. So this really shows people that you've done the due diligence and this could, this applies to any industry you can be selling, like gym products, you can be selling clothes, you can be selling paint, whatever it may be.

There's always competition. So study your competitors and tell them, I bet you tried this and that and still doesn't work. Well, guess what? I'm the solution. And then here we go, sell the vacation. What is the end state of the customer when they work with you? Right? You don't wanna sell them, like, you're gonna take this plane and then you're gonna drive through this airport.

They're gonna be dropped off here. Then you check into this hotel. They, they don't want that. They wanna know what is the end state, what's the beach like? So don't go into the nitty gritty. So many of us, like, you know, fall into the habit of like selling all the nuts and bolts. They don't want the nuts and bolts.

They, they want, they want the final picture. And then finally they're gonna have questions about, um, the price, the bandwidth, oh, about my kids, oh, about my health. And, you know, this is where you start to kind of get ahead of it and tell them, like, look, uh, if you're strapped for cash, um, I already know that you're gonna invest a lot because you have limited resources.

Or you're gonna like, pay attention to where resources go and you're gonna like double your attention to that, right? Whatever it may be. So just have a script ready to address people's most salient problems. All right. I just went through all of this, but yeah, I mean, here's a recap. So clarify what the, uh, why the prospect is there.

You need to identify what they need help with. If you don't understand their issue, there's no, you can't, you can't sell 'em anything. Label the problem. What are they struggling with? What's not working? Confirm you're on the same page. Identify. The enemy because if you don't identify the enemy, you can't win the war, which is what I meant with like competition and overview, the prospect's pain, ask what they've done in the past.

Actually, it's a really great point. You gotta ask them proactively like, what have you tried? This is good information for you. Regardless whether or not they close, diagnose why didn't work? Repeat. So make, make yourself the most logical solution. I love Alex. Sell the vacation. So sell the end state.

Identify the top three things that will help. So like the fancy features, like the beach, for example, explain why each is important to their success. Confirm they understand why each variable is essential. This helps 'em understand how you're going to actually get results. This whole section here is a fancy way of saying, describe the beach.

Describe the waves. Describe the beach smell. Remind them why they want the beach. Remind them why they desperately have to get to the beach. Again, like not the nuts and bolts, but like reminding them like why they need this vacation. You work so hard, you deserve the best, you deserve to relax, whatever it may be.

Um, and by explaining to them how intimately familiar you are with the end result, they're gonna, they're gonna have a feeling that you actually get, that you actually get them. Some of the best salespeople I know do this very well. Um. They go so ball to the walls with the ification or the beach that I'm like, oh my God, they really know their shit.

You know? They might not, but, but that it sounds like they do. So do that and explain is once again, explaining away all the main objections, like circumstance, other people sell. But you got that. You got that down. Anybody who's a business owner, I think. At a very base level, sympathize and understand what the predominant issues may be for the pros, like the prospect client, because we don't start a business without first being customers first.

I truly believe that every single business owner was somebody else's customer first. So we first and foremost, under first and foremost, understand what potential objections may arise. So practice with yourself, like play your own devil's advocate and be like, what potential objections do I have and how would I, how would I knot that out of the park?

Now you probably thought, well, why is she teaching us Alice's framework? I can just look this up. Well, here's the thing. Um, I love to blend modalities. So what I love about Alice's framework is that it has the selling power. It gives you the framework of how to sell. And it's not that different from like screenwriting tactics too, which is why I love screenwriting.

But I love to extrapolate that and drop it into the email series. So this is an eight day email series that I used to teach. Like before, but after I've discovered S framework, now I combine the two. Now you embed that closed framework into every email you write, so. This is an eight day email series. Um, this is just an example.

For example, like email. Four is a day I go live. Email. Seven is the day I go live. These are just like arbitrary dates that I pick to just pretend like I go live and like how would I send emails around that? And yes, like email eight is when enrollment closes for your product. So. Email. One is giving your audience a taste of the course, um, giving them like a trailer or a preview and introducing yourself.

And in that same email, email, you can write it in a way where you're clarifying to them why they're even on your fricking mailing list. This is where a C comes in, right? Um, by giving them a course teaser and introducing yourself, you're telling them. Why they met you in the first place.

So, for example, I love to open up by saying, I try all these coaches and mentors and healers, and I still felt alone.

I still felt broke and nothing worked. When people read that in my email, as I introduce myself, they're like, oh yeah, that's why I signed up with Hey, June, because I, because I'm in the O2, right? And then email two is reveal your cards and answer the question, what is the course or what is the product?

What's the surface? Make sure it's clear. What you're offering and what is valuable, you know this is labeling the problem. Yes. You are saying like, I have this course now, but you're talking about very clearly why you're offering it. What's the why? The why is the problem. It's labeling the problem of like what they're dealing with.

Um, so I love to drop the bomb. You know, they're, first of all, they're already shocked that you know what their issue is or, or why you, why they signed up. And now you're like, really like honing it in. And they're like, whoa. Like she can read, remind, read my mind. And then email three is, um, the official sales launch.

Remember to update your audience. Let. To let people start rolling in your course. So what does this mean? So this means, um, the doors are open, you're saying this is the price, this is when the course starts. The doors are open, go sign up. You might have a coupon code or like an early bird special. So this is where I like to go the extra mile in email three and also embed the overview.

Now, what was the overview? It was literally like an overview of like what they've done in the past and didn't work, right? So here you can say email three is a perfect way to kind of like show people. Competitor analysis. I don't think it has to be like an obvious, like glaring competitor analysis, but I think there's definitely ways to, um, write a couple of sentences that show how this course or this product is going to solve their issues that very clearly their competitors don't have an advantage over.

So for example, in my business class, I integrate the energy. Like energetic blueprint with business frameworks. That's, that's something that a lot of business coaches don't have, like pure business coaches, nor pure intuitive coaches. I integrate the two and that like creates a lot of aha moment for people.

So label the problem at the same time, like making sure they're aware of like how you're different. And then email four is when you go live. Tell them Thank you for being part of my journey. Thank you for being here with me. Thank you for being part of my mailing list. And, um, give them like a social proof.

So what does that mean? Like if you have previous client testimonials, like shamelessly, drop it in here. I don't care if it's your mom, I don't care if it's your neighbor. If somebody love your product and they give you a glowing review, put that in there because people wanna know that this shit works.

Yeah. Including any testimonials I forgot to mention, it's not a bad idea to. Say from day one, Hey, I'm going live on email form, or day four, so proactively advertise your live date and also when you go live this day, this is why I put it under the, the selling, the vacation portion. Don't hesitate to.

Describe the vacation above and beyond during the live, and also repeat this closed framework during the live. You see how it's kind of meta, we're stretching out the closed framework throughout the email series, but we're also like recycling it during the actual live in that compact 60 minute component.

This may seem complicated in a lot, but it's really, it's really not in the grand scheme of things, it. We're literally just learning two frameworks, the closed framework and the email framework, and we're just like slicing and dicing and putting it together. One more thing, testimonials is selling the vacation.

Your customers, your prior customers are describing the vacation on your behalf to your potential customers. That's another reason why email four is under the sales framework. Email five. So this is where you sell Andex. Explain. I would sprinkle in a bonus offer so that they know that they're getting a little bit extra by signing up early.

This is a really good way to like push people over the edge who were on the fence about it anyway, this is also a really good time to use the bonus offer to explain away their problem or issue. So maybe their concern is that they don't get enough time with you. If you're a coach and you're selling like a digital course, maybe their concern is that you're gonna be too hands off.

And the special offer here is like, Hey, if you sign up early, you get extra 30 minutes with me. So you can transform or repurpose your bonus into a potential objection. Now, email six is when you go full blown with the explanation. So what this means is, um. FAQ, dropping the FAQ answer. Some frequently asked questions.

I, I have an F, A Q that I like, repeat constantly. Is this course right for me? Um, do I need other materials? How long does the course lasts and is it self-guided? I mean, is there a refund policy? You know, all these things I would put on email, six. And the other reason why I embedded the overview plus the explain on email six is because there's definitely an opportunity to integrate the two.

One of the FAQ questions can be, how is this different? How is your product different from blank person? This person, I've had students who took my course and very candidly told me like. I went to this person before you, I went to that person, like they gave me names and heck, they already on my mailing list.

I don't give a shit. I will use those names to do a very clear compare and contrast in my FAQ so that A, they know that I understand my competition and b, I understand their pain. And so three, I'm getting ahead of it. Or, I'm sorry, AB or C, not AB or three and email seven. Overview and sell. So honestly, you don't have to go live.

Again, I, I kind of do double lives 'cause like lives bring in the most amount of sales. I would explain who the course is for that, that's how it kind like wrap up the entire email series. I would say like, Hey listen, you've been opening my emails. This is who it's really for. Um, just to remind them all over again.

So what this does, it, it is showing people, it's retargeting people who have tried out your competition, but for some reason they're still on the fence 'cause they've been burned. And then some, the vacation once again. And then in last, but not least, email aid, I would announce that the enrollment is closing.

And basically saying like, Hey, you have 12 hours to sign up. That really works too. So I would highly encourage that. Now, do I, do you have to religiously follow this framework? No, please don't. Actually, this is just a standard guideline. You may think like, oh my God, this feels so rigid. Take this and make it your own.

Um, this is one of those things, if you write, if you just write out for a single product, you can set it and forget it and just like relaunch it every single time. Maybe all you have to do is go back and just tweak the date a little bit, right? Because like one of the emails can say like, we're launching on July 1st, and.

Later you recycle it and it's actually like March 16th of next year. And you're like, well, shit. So pay attention to those details like times and maybe like refund policies or like expert names overall, like take this six week launch plan, eight day email series and the close framework. Take those three things and make it your own.

But I will tell you, I've tried this a few times, this specific framework and it's, it's brought in a decent number of sales, like pretty passively. That's why I'm recommending it. It's much better than me, just like. Basically like picking a date and going live and just like hoping in two days, like the sale comes in like that.

That has happened but not successfully. Whereas this, like I feel secure, like I feel confident because this is tried and true. It tracks human psychology and buying behavior. People need to hear something at least like seven times before they pull the trigger, you see? So, so yeah, here you go. You can recycle this format in.

Or social media posts in your stories, in your, uh, YouTube videos. Each of these emails can be replaced with a video, like a 32nd video if you're able to sell a vacation in 30 seconds or less, which by the way, that's what an ad is. Go for it. Great. 'cause some people don't even read email. Now post-sale nurturing.

'cause I get questions about like, oh my God, but what about people that like opened all my emails but didn't purchase? Okay. So I mean, that happens to everybody. So what you can do is you can segment this in your email series. And by the way, if you're like, oh my God, I need help with all this, how to do all this, this is where my business growth class comes in.

But the post-sale nurturing, what this means is you're nurturing people who opened your emails, what didn't purchase. What is missing for them is, I mean, it could be various things, but I like to think it's usually education. Like they're missing how valuable your class is. So after your launch, just keep retargeting your students by sending them educational emails, like use cases, testimonials, free webinars.

You might have free webinars that you just, that you know that is just laying around in your computer and you don't even know, like I have so many lives. That I look and I'm like, holy shit, this is so valuable. So you can repurpose them into webinar and just like launch it and relaunch it, you see. Um, thanks for watching this masterclass.

I hope you guys crush it with your email series and your six week launch plan. But yeah, hope this was like relatively straightforward. If not, I would love to hear from you. Um, you guys know my email? You guys have my dm. Yeah. I just wish more business owners knew these frameworks because it's a game changer and it's gonna.

S like, free up so much of your time, but please make sure, especially like in your first week, as you can see, this part, this process is really, really important to do because every, every bit of this entire process needs to be like bullet tight. Like it needs to be airtight because if you don't know the problem you're solving for the whole thing kind of collapses.

'cause people are gonna be reading your emails and they're like, they're gonna be confused about like why they even need you in the first place. So. That's why week one is all about research. I know people who are, who get so jazzed about a project idea, they just like dive straight in. And it's like, not until like sales time, they're like, oh shit, actually nobody wants this.

So we wanna avoid that catastrophe. So I would say like, if you set yourself up for success starting week one, you're good to go. And the, the rest of the weeks, 'cause the rest of the weeks you can always hire someone to help you. You can have your friends or partner help, like co-edit whatever you're writing down.

Um, but I would say like the presale is like the most important week to like really gauge how you're gonna fare in the market. All right. Thanks for tuning in. Good luck with all your businesses. Take care. Bye-bye.
