Feminine Vs. Masculine: Purpose & Career

This coaching session highlights the importance of balancing different aspects of business and personal fulfillment, emphasizing clarity, structure, and leveraging one's strengths to achieve success and happiness.

Feminine Aspect: Represents inspiration, vision, empathy, passion, and serving the community. It's the heart and soul of the business.
Masculine Aspect: Encompasses strategy, research, structure, operations, systems, and tools to scale and support the business.
Importance of Balance: Both aspects are essential, and their levels must adapt as the business evolves.

Application Beyond Business Ownership:

Even if one is in a traditional job, these concepts apply. Lack of inspiration indicates a deficiency in the feminine aspect, while burnout and inefficiency suggest a lack in the masculine aspect.
Personal Fulfillment and Happiness:
Identify What Makes You Happy: Before diving into personal development or business growth, one must determine what truly fulfills them. This personal clarity is crucial for setting goals and measuring success.

Tasks and Roles in Business:

Focus on Joyful Tasks: Identify which aspects of the business/job bring the most pleasure and focus on those. Delegate or seek help for tasks that do not bring joy.
Strategic Delegation: Hiring the right people for tasks that do not align with one's strengths or interests can significantly boost efficiency and satisfaction.

Balancing Feminine and Masculine Strengths:

Natural Strengths: Recognize and leverage natural strengths, whether they lean towards the feminine or masculine aspects.
Polarity and Manifestation: Balance is key to creating new opportunities and maintaining harmony in business and personal life.

Practical Steps for Business Owners:

Pricing and Structure: Establish clear pricing and service structures to avoid undervaluing oneself and to set firm boundaries.
Testimonials and Proof: Use testimonials, success stories, and quantitative results to build confidence and establish worth.
Energetic Confidence: Cultivate overconfidence in one's worth to help push this belief into reality.

Example Cases and Solutions:
Kacie 8:29
Megan 14:34
Nivaaz 24:40
Lorelai 31:48
Abhinav 53:50

Final Tips:
Structure and Support: Emphasize the importance of structure and operational support to protect one's time and energy.
Content Strategy: For those struggling with content creation, plan to discuss further strategies to make it manageable and effective.

Feminine Vs. Masculine: Purpose & Career Video Transcript:
So today's emphasis will be primarily on business finance, but doing it with the heart and soul, being aligned to the purpose piece.

All right. Can you guys, actually what's the best way to do this? Um,

I want you guys to take an intuitive guess. Type in the comments, what do you think is, well except for Casey, because you already said it, but what do you think is the primary lever that's missing? The feminine or the masculine? When it comes to purpose and defining. and by the way, I both Very simple.

I mean, the execution is always a bitch, but once you figure out what's missing, all you have to do is actually do it. But if you work to self assess what's sort of missing, the feminine is usually the vision, the inspiration, the feeling, also your capacity to receive more abundance. especially if you're a female business owner, and you're really good at driving, chasing, executing, planning, strategizing.

I wouldn't be surprised if it has a trickle down effect in other parts of your life. Not always, but that's usually the case. if you're lacking the masculine, yeah, if you're lacking the masculine, though, you are probably, doing a lot of repetitive tasks. You're probably, your operations are probably not in order.

You probably haven't figured out how to scale yourself. You're very passionate and you're very, you know, inspired by your work, but you're always putting out fire. So let me recap that. This is, this is kind of like advanced concept from Artist's Way, but essentially the feminine aspect Is the inspiration, the vision, the empathy, the passion, the, you know, the heart and soul that really wants to serve your community.

The masculine aspects of the business is the, the strategy, the research, the, the structure, operations really, and the systems and the softwares and tools you have in place to scale and support that you have. You need both. You really, really need both. And every time you level up, they both kind of level up in a different way too.

if you're like, Hey, I'm not a business owner. I'm in a nine to five. That's totally okay. You can take that exact same concept. Where do you feel like you're lacking in your career or your job? Are you kind of at a point where you're like, I don't know what the hell it is I'm doing. I don't feel very inspired.

But the job is cushy, it's fine.

then you're kind of lacking the feminine piece. If you are, if you feel like you're constantly burnt out, if you feel like you're not working efficiently, if you feel like your role is not efficient, if you don't feel supported with the right systems and tools, and the resources at the work, maybe the masculine piece is lacking. So let's check the comments. I'm curious what everyone said.

I purposely did not read it until after I first said this. Megan, being able to receive, masculine, uh, awesome. So interesting, the room is pretty evenly split. Uh, mhm.

Megan, that's a great question. Um, was that question meant to be private, or can I share this with the group?

I don't think you'd care either way. Yeah, so Megan asks, does this have to do with human design? Does our human design impact this at all? there are, each gate is associated with a feminine versus masculine, except like gate 34 or something, that was like neutral. but I don't think this has much to do with it, quite frankly.

All right. since this room is evenly split, let's address both parties. You first have to and before I go into this stuff, and I got very lucky because no one said something out left feel like I want to I don't know, people always have these crazy manifestation goals that's it's just really out of the blue.

I'm like, okay, I don't have to address that at least. Like, this is a very aligned group today with the same theme, so that's super, super duper helpful. okay, before we go into all of this stuff, I want to remind you guys, because this is not often discussed in spirituality or personal development or the wellness field, you have to figure out for yourself what makes you first and foremost happy.

Because what else is the point of doing this work? what else is the point of working on yourself? What is the point of running your business or working or growing your business? I mean, it might, you must get some kind of fulfillment in that, right? For me, my business and my work and my clients are my babies.

Like I really care about every component of it very, very deeply. I've always been a workaholic, you know, my parents to this, they're like, why are you working so hard? And I'm like, it's just how I'm wired. It's what makes me happy. Like, you know, so you have to define for yourself what makes you happy. If you are the kind of person that's just kind of like, I just want to make X amount and not have to work any harder.

And that fulfills me great own it, embrace it and reverse engineer, how you can get there. But you got to be really radically honest with yourself about what truly fulfills you and what makes you happy or else you're going to be following someone else's blueprint blueprint. And I see business owners do this all the time.

You don't have to making like eight figures. To be uber happy. In fact, I would tell you right now, there's a lot of eight figure owners I know who are not happy. on the flip side, maybe you wear hats in your business that you don't want to wear. Maybe you do stuff at your job that you don't want to do, but you pay your dues above and beyond.

So that's the first piece that I want everyone to remember before going in and before we start this year. Like, how do you want, like, where do you want to land at the end of this year? Do you want to, like, how do you want to be spending your time or when you look back, are you going to be happy with how you spent your time and like, did it like give you true fulfillment?

So if you have a journal and pen, let's just make that the first bullet point. Like, if you can write down, like, if you look back, how do you wish you would have spent your time in your business? So for, for me, for example, I had to do this like deep work, like last two years, I had to be like, okay, do I want to be making content every day?

Do I want to be coaching every day? Do I want to be managing my employees? Or do I want like a manager? Like, these are questions that I had to ask myself and I made a conscious decision and a lot of this was ego. Like I, so much of my identity and my ego is attached to being a coach, which is funny, cause I don't even like coaching, just being transparent.

So I really thought I had to show up and coach until I made the decision. Like, no, I can still be like, I love the operation side. Like that shit. Like I just love, I just made a decision and like, I'm going to cherry pick what I love and I will. Find the best coaches and let them deliver the product. So you've got to make that exact same decision, which part of your business, your job, gives you the most amount of pleasure that you truly see yourself, like, devoting yourself to without getting resentful.

Because that is where you'll drive a lot of consistent life force energy from. Just give a thumbs up if you've written that out.

This does not mean, by the way, you forego other responsibilities within your job or in your business. It just means you figure out where to get help from.

So that's the first thing I want to knock out of the park. So just keep that as your North Star in your journal, in your notes, just keep referring to that throughout the session. Just keep reminding yourself, like, this is the thing I really want to do, the other parts I don't really care.

But you've got to make a promise to yourself that you will get, that you will get help for it. And that you can get help for it. Because I know so many people Without mentioning names, a couple of my clients, they're like, I have revenue problems. have branding problems. Uh, and these are people, by the way, that have scaled their business to, like, huge, like, great degree, like, way bigger than me.

And they can't get out of it because they're stuck in roles that they don't want to do. They fail to scale themselves, and now they can't take themselves out without, like, crumbling the business. Like at that point, they're too like in deep, right? And they don't want to hear it. If I tell them like, well, you got to hire this person, that person, that person, well, I'm just like way too in it.

Like even see like for us for the trees. So it's important for you to be like really honest with yourself from the onset. Okay, so let's talk about feminine versus masculine. Let me just go back to the chats.

So when we are stronger in one side versus the other, that's because that's our strength. Would you guys agree? If you're naturally good with the masculine stuff, if you have that part of your business dialed down, that's because that's your natural strength. If you're naturally dialed down the feminine stuff, that's because that's your strength.

There's nothing wrong with that, but we're talking about alignment. And what creates manifestation and what creates anything new in life is polarity. That's always a magic formula. It always requires polarity. So what you guys typed on the chat is basically assessing, okay, where am I off in the polarity?

So as much as like, I know my strength, I still need this other part for me to integrate and get rid of something new. So let's start with, um, can you guys raise your hand again? Cause I can't count the chat who, who felt like they were lacking the feminine part. I'm going to both do feminine and masculine.

Just raise your, if you just raise your hand, zoom recognizes it. And we'll do like a hands up. Is it not doing that? It used to do that. Okay, there's like maybe five people. All right, so This is actually tricky Until you get it and once you get it, it's so easy. You're like wait what that's all it took I actually want to ask Casey real fast if you don't mind being a volunteer Do you think when you because there's multiple different components of the you know, the feminine piece, right?

Is it the lack of inspiration? Like, I don't know if I want to be in this industry anymore. Is it like that or is it more like I have, I just have a hard time inspiring my clients to be on board. So is it a disinterest or lack of visioning within your own field or getting other people to be bought into your mission?

Maybe it's a, it's a disinterest in what I'm currently doing because I'm kind of transitioning. I'm actually really, maybe, now that you're, you're, we're talking, I'm like, maybe I am more lacking in the masculine and what I was considering the, um, masculine to be was like the hustle culture kind of vibe.

Like, I've been doing hair and makeup, like, for, like, commercials and advertising and stuff for 15 years and just, Burnt out, you know, and I'm kind of losing my passion for it. So what I'm what I mean by femininity is creating more ease and flow and like passive forms of income is what what I was kind of referring to, but in terms of operations of my business, I'm pretty solid on being creative and coming up with ideas.

And especially where I'm going, and as I'm transitioning into a different type of career, but yeah, I do lack and. The masculine, actually, but I hired someone to do that, so. Oh, you did? Oh, when? Is it recent? Like, uh, two months ago. Yeah. Okay, perfect. And do you feel like a shift or a lift in your energy after doing that?

Yeah, we're, I'm still training her, but, I feel like, yeah, I'm like, my inbox is zero for the first time, like, in 15 years. So that's pretty sweet. Yes, that is a number one sign, by the way, that you're lacking the masculine support. If you feel burned out, if you're doing repetitive things and you don't want to do it anymore.

It's not because you can't do it or don't know how to do it. You're just like, I've done this a million times. I haven't, I've had enough. There was one business owner that I worked with, like two years ago. She hired a person to do just one thing, just one small thing.

And then she went from making zero to literally six figures a month. It was crazy. And it was like, all she did was like, fill this one role. So that's why I said, go back to your list of like, what are some things you want to keep focusing on and others don't? And you have to figure out a way to fill those roles.

And that's a decision you have to make and not be scared and not because, okay, so, so Casey, so the masking piece, okay. That piece like it's on the way on the road to being resolved. And that actually frees up your time to kind of feel into what you want to do next now that your time is freed up or what you want, how you want to augment your current business so that you can like enter new, you know, adjacent pathways to hair and makeup, perhaps that like kind of like reinvigorates you.

That's what it seems like. Yeah, definitely. I feel like. Go ahead. Go ahead. Um, I think I'm transitioning out of hair and makeup altogether. which seems kind of crazy, but I still want to be in the beauty space, but more like, so last year I was on a pretty big health journey. I lost like 110 pounds and, um, kind of changed my whole life.

And I'm focusing like, especially on my tech talk more around like beauty and wellness and all that good stuff. I call it, uh, beauty hacking is like. You know, combining like ancient wisdom, modern technology to be our most beautiful, like radiant selves and it's still in the beauty space, but that's kind of where I'm more passionate about.

That's what I'm more passionate about. I don't want to teach people about hair and makeup. I really could give, like, I could care less about it. I think the intersection of beauty, especially inner beauty and spirituality is like going to blow up. Oh, hold on. I actually know plastic surgeons who are entering that space where they're like, without plastic surgery, can there be organic transformation on the, on the facial structure of a person?

Like there's people who are writing books about that. Yeah. I just listened to a podcast about that the other day, actually. Yeah. That's amazing. Right. So something definitely there. And I, so that's good. Trust your gut and intuition. My next challenge for you, and I want everyone to pay attention to this because this is where some people like mess things up.

when you get excited about an idea, I would push you to think just 20 steps ahead and be like, how could I stay in this business without being burnt out? Because people get super excited. And jump straight into content, product, creation, and delivery. And the next thing you know, you're stuck with a product that you have to deliver, and it's not scalable.

I am not a generator. So I am not a I can't afford to burn out, which is a constant risk. So something that I shifted in my life is to be like, Yes, I'm excited about this product or service. I can go just jump into it, like I did like 10 million times, and get burned again. Or just, just, you know, think a little bit further ahead.

Like, how do I want this to like, do I want to talk about it? Do I want to sell it? Do I want to, you know, do I even podcasts are difficult for me? Totally. I'm a generator. Perfect. So just pick, just, you know, be, this is like a feminine exercise. Like imagine you being in that field and kind of like settle into what feels good to you.

Is it, maybe it's a series of podcasts and you monetize that maybe that's your or you call, or you may, or maybe you. patent something, or maybe you, whatever, just, but select a vehicle that will energize you. Okay. And then relentlessly pursue that. Awesome. Yes. I don't know. It doesn't seem like you have the feminine.

I don't think that's the issue. I think it was like the masculine stuff. Yeah, I think it was actually. But yeah, just creating more like less like trading time for money and more of just passive forms of income, like just receiving, letting it float towards me instead of going to get it. You know, I guess I will be going to get it in a different way, but thank you.

You're welcome. I'm very excited for you. Okay, let's um, let me check the chat again. Let's pick, let's pick who else had the feminine stuff that they were struggling with. Raise your hand again so I could, I want one more volunteer.

Megan,

is it, I'm going to ask you the same question that I asked Casey. Is it a lack of interest in or inspiration of your current field or getting people to be bought into your vision? It's more of the like receiving, the receiving aspect, like being able to receive my worth, if that makes any sense. So pricing, we're talking about pricing.

Because I tend to, down, like downplay what I'm capable of doing, like in regards to monetarily. And then I feel like there's, I shut down and I feel like bitter, but I have nobody to blame but myself. I'm working on that in the sense of I, I got like a referral, from one of my clients for somebody and they were talking and I do a discovery call and I asked them, okay, what's your budget?

And they couldn't tell me and they're like, so what, what do you think my budget should be? And I just, I told them, I can't tell you that. So it's kind of me. Learning to step into that, and also I have difficulty communicating my emotions as well. The pricing thing is, is, what's funny is, to me, that's kind of, It's an integration of the feminine versus the masculine.

Mm hmm. To me, it's both. And here's why. Because you need the structure to protect you from low value customers.

They go hand in hand. You need the structure to be able to support you to receive what you're worth. without knowing exactly what business or industry or product you're in, a very simple and low hanging fruit fix is having a service menu and just being like, this is the menu. This is the, this is the items and the price.

End of story. Sorry. You're like, you're triangulating the situation to like this, like this. It's not my fault. It's just, you know, it's my charge. So you're kind of like deflecting to that, that masculine boundary and structure that exists. I was having this conversation with a different client, a couple of weeks ago and I got really pissed at them.

Cause I'm like, why is it so hard for you to grasp? When a, when a customer asks you, how much do you charge for a blank? You can't just say, and these guys have been in business for years. You know, they're website developers, you know, service. Oh, wow. Okay. We'll see there. Yeah. Yeah. I do websites, email, SMS marketing, like the digital marketing space.

Perfect. Okay. So that was intuition. Um, and they've service serve big clients, right? Like, uh, like Gwen Stefani, but after all this time, when somebody asked them for like, Hey, what's your, how much do you try for blank? They're like, well, we can make whatever work for you. It's a sliding. So I'm like, stop saying that.

What are you doing? You know, just tell them this. Is what we can do for you from this range to this range. And this is what you get period. End of story. You got to set up that masculine structure because that is very, the pricing and servicing and deliverability is all very masculine without that you're exposed.

You're vulnerable. Anybody can just entering, like grab it. What's yours. So. That's the inverse of the femininity, right? Like you, you, you can receive, but you can also be like, like not stolen from, but you're taking advantage of it. So yeah, that's like barrier. And the reason why, yeah. And the reason why a lot of business owners struggle with this, two things going on, you know, cause they feel bad for the customer sometimes.

And, you know, they, they overly empathize there. There's, there's that going on for real. But then the other pieces, there's a lack of confidence. Of your, of your ability or your, um, that's it's stature. I don't want to say stature, but like I was saying stature, like it's almost like a, like a, like I see other people and they're more successful, like on whatever.

So it's kind of like, okay, well, if they're charging this. I should half my price because I'm not at that level. So it's almost like I'm shooting myself in the foot. That's a belief. That's a belief that can absolutely shift it. Yeah. Raise your hand by the way if If you have a 9 5 or if you have a job and you're experiencing a similar issue where you want to ask for a raise or you're overdue a raise and you're not quite sure how to like navigate going about asking for it, raise your hand if that's you because that's a very similar dynamic.

It's a similar thing. It's the same thing. Asking for your worth. Okay. So the way to approach that or solve for that exact same solution, you have to energetically get to a place where you're so overconfident. That what you're asking for your worth and you have to push that feeling constantly out to the outer reality.

How does it manifest in the outer reality? Having testimonials, success stories, proof stats of like how X amount of work that you've done led to Y kind of result that your employer might like, or your client might like, like, unfortunately the masculine stuff is like less sexy because a lot of it is like trying to push it onto reality, like showing tangible approved tangible results.

I think sometimes, I don't know if it's too late, but I think part of the reason why my, my masculine side is more strong is because I was like literally pummeled and trained to be this way throughout my 20s, because I worked in like really intense jobs, like Wall Street, hedge fund, tech, it's like, everyone's always asking like, where's the evidence, what's, what's the track record, what's the stats, like you got to be ready to like talk to the results, and that's a very masculine thing, and you could literally write out a script, but.

That you're ready to like fire off at your employer or your clients or whoever who's asking you for your, not reviews, but your results. Kind of like social proof. Like you're, you're proving yourself through, yeah, like through, um, quantitative results. Right. And numbers are especially very masculine, right?

So it's like the more you can like beef it up with people also just in general people love numbers like people because it's like reliable so, you know, putting in putting things in a function of like dollars, time, time saved, dollar saved, you know, increased output, whatever.

I know this sounds like very simplistic and duh, but the real you'll be you guys be surprised how many people like don't do this even the most seasoned entrepreneurs. You know, because they kind of get to a point where they're like, well, don't you just know who I am? It's like, no, there's always people who don't know you.

What are you talking about? You know, so like, brush up on your skills for ability.

So you pause just for a second. Oh, I'm back. Okay, so I'm a, what is it, 3 5 emotional, projector. So how do I balance that? Like in regards to like, I, I want to like, you know, get more clients and so on, but like the waiting for an invite, like that aspect of it. One thing I always tell, raise your hand if you're a projector.

Three projectors. Okay. Um, this is the ultimate cheat code for projectors. You have to keep putting yourself out there. You have to keep, you have to keep uh, but, but don't do it in a way, you know, where you're like, compromising who you are. Like, do it authentically. Like, you know, be inspired and like, speak on things that truly light you up.

But, the most successful projectors I know are relentless about putting themselves out there with zero expectations. So constantly putting out content. Or constantly networking. Constantly taking somebody out to dinner. It's not that you are waiting for an invitation. I think that's a misnomer. It's more that you put yourself in a positional situation so that you can be invited.

Continuously, Taylor Swift is a projector. One of my attorneys, she's not my attorney, but she's one of my clients. She represents Cardi B. She spent a good chunk of time as a projector just networking continuously in L. A. Like not giving up and like just like constantly being seen. So that's the ultimate Chico for projectors, like constantly being seen.

So yeah, I, I, whoever said, I mean, I know who said it, the raw guy or whatever, but like, waiting for an invitation is like, that's actually just not accurate. It's, it's more about setting yourself up for opportunities for invitation. Gary Vee's a projector. You guys all know Gary Vaynerchuk, right? That guy's all about, you know, being a content machine.

There's a reason why he says that. That's coming from himself. That's, that's, that worked for him. He was relentless at putting himself out there until people just heard him and saw him. So, uh, so for you, Megan, I think you can do a two pronged approach where you really be Keep up that mask and structure to protect you, the pricing, the menu, or whatever, sticking to it, and continuously putting yourself in situations where people use your, like, need your services and, and, uh, your abilities until you run into people who are not turned off by the menu that you present.

That's the name of the game. Also for projectors, it's really important to have that support, that operational support, whether it's in the form of like, you know, a system, like a calendar, or a software, BA, that's very important for projectors. Again, it kind of goes back to when you were saying structure.

Um, I found this app called LifeAct and it helps a lot. Like it's because like I'm, I just write normally like my to do list and I don't have structure, but In like because of you and human design and kind of like learning more about that aspect of myself. I'm like, okay, I have to figure out how to time block and all that.

So that's helped as well. So the structure. Yes, I do agree. Um, the content machine aspect, that's going to be a little hard. Because I'm very like, I'm It's hard for me. We'll talk about content. Let's put a pin on that at the end because I know there's a couple people in here who want to talk about content a little bit.

Okay. and I do think it's important. Okay, so let's, same thing, let's pick two volunteers for the mask stuff. Is this helpful, you guys? Hopefully, like, there's something for everyone to take away from this. Okay, great. Uh, let me go through the chat real fast.

I guess Megan, tell me your story. Or sorry, not Megan, sorry, Hazel.

Uh, we can't hear you.

Maybe there's a mic problem. In which case we might have to

We can actually, uh

No, it's not working, right, Hazel? That's all right. We can try to pick, uh, somebody else. It's okay, no problem. Nevas. Hi. So you have the, you have the inspiration, you have the vision. Where do you, where do you think you're lacking the masculine? Is it, is it the physical execution of your idea and bringing it to reality?

Or, is it you're executing but you think you're not being efficient? A. K. A. you're not skilling. Yeah, so I'm early stages, and I'm building out an app, so it's just like the process of building out the app is taking a lot longer than I thought it was going to, and like that's kind of frustrating me, and then the other part of it is I think just like, Not planning and then like routine and sticking to that and actually executing, but I think the vision is really strong, but it's just like the execution pace.

So bringing the app to reality. Yeah, and generating things. Generating, you mean like beta testers for the app? Yeah, pretty much. Okay, just full disclosure for everyone, like Nevas and I have worked together before for Artist Way, so at the time when she and I worked together, she was actually working on the visioning piece.

She's got the vision down now, so now she's moving on to the master piece, which is great. So, you know, things happen in tranches. Um, raise your hand if anybody else is grappling with the execution piece. You're like, man, I have the ideas. I can't seem to just bring it over the finish line in reality. Okay, so you're, well, you're in the right place.

And you're not going to like what I have to say. At all. Um, and actually after Nivas, After Nivas, I want to pick Lorelai's brain because I feel like she might have like a different um, angle of the masculine piece that she might be grappling with, which I think will apply to everyone in this room as well.

Ugh, okay. So, there is a price you pay up front. Whenever you bring something into reality, it always takes more energy than you currently have to bring something new into real life This is why I told you guys up front you have to first realistically assess what makes you happy because If you have the goal posts in mind Maybe you're okay with short term pain.

Shit, it takes maybe 200 to make this app, that's okay. Because once it's done, it's done. But, if it's a never ending thing, and you don't derive joy from it, gotta quit now.

So, could you, before you try to, I mean I'm sure you already did this, but like before you go into like making it, do you have like a roadmap on like, you know, timelines, deadlines? I, for me, like, I don't mind the grind as long as I have an end in sight. And I always have an end in sight. Do you have that end in sight?

If you do, let that motivate you. This also goes for the job. If you're like, man, like my endgame here is to just make X amount and get X title and just bounce. Great! Keep that as an end in sight. I think a lot of people are just preemptively, like, not Most people can't rip engineer from their end from their end goal for whatever reason.

And then they just kind of swim in the water to do kind of a thing. Well, let the end motivate you. And if your answer is, actually, I don't know what the end is. I don't know, like, how long it takes me. And I don't know what the steps are. Well, you're gonna do the homework. That is a very masculine piece, too.

I don't want to like oversimplify the situation. But I kind of want to address the obvious first, if that sense some other does anybody want to just like popcorn still like shout out what like how well with the execution piece. Is it the energy levels? Like, you have a hard time, like, literally showing up and everything.

Because I have a feeling some people are struggling with that. Like, I just want it to be done. I know what needs to get done. I know how to do it. But man, I just don't want to do it.

I think it can be like ADHD. Overwhelmed. Haha. For sure. That's fair. That is fair. And, uh, Some people also have kids, right? Like, family. And they can't always, even though they have all the pieces, they can't get it done because they have, like, other things and people pulling up their attention. Yeah. Yeah, okay, so that's, that's a much trickier piece if you have a lot of responsibility in life and a lot of things pulling at you.

So this is where human design can be a little bit helpful. If you're a manifesting generator and you have this problem, you have to figure out a way to juggle different things. If you have one task that you need to get done and you're like, shit, I really can't find the motivation, make yourself busier.

Find two, three other things to layer yourself up with. If you're a generator, really focus on the aspect of what it is you're trying to do that brings you joy and just do that and like delegate the rest. So for example, like one of my clients, uh, she is, she's not a nanny. She's, she's definitely not a nanny. I keep forgetting what her job title is anyway. And she, um, she really wants to get to a place where she's like, Teaching mothers, coaching mothers. But she first needs to, do what? Make a course. Do what? Make content. Do what? Make websites. She can't do these things cause, why?

Cause these are not her strengths. And I told her just delegate it. You have the money find the people who can execute it for you. So if you're a generator, like, once again, like, figure out what it is you need, but delegate. If you're a projector, say, don't get bogged down, don't get stuck. If you find yourself slowing down because you don't want to, you're not motivated to do something, ask for help. I, I would say that's the number one thing.

I'm just, I'm just curious, Raymond, you raised your hand earlier. Where, where are you grappling with the execution piece? If you don't mind me asking.

Um, you're on mute unless you don't want to share.

Okay, maybe he's typing. Um, okay. So the other thing that. That is super unsexy. I'm just gonna say to you, the people that go really far in business stuff, or just not even business, just even in regular jobs, are the people who are willing to do the most boring shit ever, as long as they need to. There's really no escaping this.

There's really no escaping this. Again, it's not forever. It's really, really not. But there's an upfront cost you pay. For example, you want to be a coach? There's an upfront cost you pay to get a certification or to create courses or to whatever, right? Same thing with an app. So it's like, a lot of this is pre planning and allotting time to what you're willing to, to bear the cost of in the beginning.

If you're a salesperson, there's a learning curve, right? You have to learn the product. You have to learn the pitch. You have to learn the script. But once you do it, you're golden.

So I guess the ultimate formula is how much time, energy, and resources are you willing to devote so that you can become a subject matter expert slash until you have a finished product? What's that equation? What's that sweet spot for you? And commit to it. And figuring out a way to continuously, you know, get in touch with that feminine side and reconnect with their vision as to why you're in it, why you're doing it.

Because if the vision is not pulling you, then it's hard to stay motivated. I'm not gonna lie.

Okay, we'll take questions at the end if this was a little too I don't think it's complicated, but if anyone has like their own nuanced situation they want to run by me, you can definitely go through it. One more masculine example. Lorelei, talk to me. Yeah, so I am really good at receiving the vision, taking action, gaining momentum, calling in the people, and then it's a very inconsistent flow.

And I think what it is, is that I don't have the proper team and I know that it's going to require a different amount of leadership from me. So currently I have someone that helps me with technical things like If I need a sales page or if I need a graphic or something like that, and then I have another person who was a former monk and he helps.

Bring me to clarity and groundedness so that my brain is clear, concise, my message, my words, they're in alignment and I feel confident educating and speaking, but I know that's not all that I need to, you know, run a successful business. So like today I, I went on a podcast and it's a pretty popular podcast.

And, um, I was just thinking when they come to my platform. It's so hard to, even though I don't have a problem getting the clients, if I were to make it really easy for people to find me, it's not easy to find me, number one. And number two, I don't think I have the team. I, I worked on increasing my capacity to hold more and to be responsible for more.

But while, while I was in this conversation, I realized in that stretching of my capacity, I still need support. Like I can't. Do it all. So I just feel kind of in the dark around what that looks like as a first step. And I value simplicity just to let you know. So, yeah. Yeah. Okay. Um, I was talking to another client about this exact problem and she's in a very different business, but the, but the core route is, I know I need the support, I'm open to the support.

I still know what kind of support, like something's missing and therefore the revenue was suffering. I mean, I don't know if that's what the story is, but I'm assuming that's kind of what it boils down to. Do you, um, okay, this is for anyone in this room, even if a nine to five PS doesn't matter who feels like, like they could use their support or manage support, employee support, whatever.

The first thing to is to look at a lot of this also is just kind of like business one on one, um, and depending on what you're in, like all. One on one. Is it like, you know, financial analyst one on one? Because every job, every function has a road map to success. So first you have to like master that. So Lorelei, for example, for you, I know you're in the online business world like me.

So my brain is going to, okay, does she have a good content machine? Does she have a way to convert the people who view the content to, um, booked calls? Does she have, I'm just thinking out loud, does she have sales people? Does she have people in her DMS who can answer DMS on her behalf? Did she have, you know, um, because the reality is that, you know, the people who create the content are not client facing, they're two different functions.

So it, part of me, part of this feels to me like. You're not too far away from what getting the support that you want. It almost feels like identifying what part of the leg is missing with that online world. And the, the only thing that's tricky about this is that the online space does change pretty fast.

So somebody said in the chat, click funnels. Yeah, that's like kind of outdated at this point. People don't do that anymore. So a lot of this is maybe fine. Huh? No, just funnels in general, not click funnels, but just like a sales funnel in general. Correct. Correct. We used to have like really well, not really, but the world used to have like very elaborate funnels, right?

We don't do that anymore. Now it's just like, people want to buy on the spot, like from content to like conversion. Maybe they will have, maybe they'll talk to someone in between. That's about it. So, um, that's my question to you actually, do you have salespeople? So I, my first trip, but when you asked us, like, who do we need to hire or something like that?

I wrote down who, who is it that I need to support me with content. I make great content, but when I'm constantly having to think about content amongst like doing the things that I need to do in my business. Then I can't I think I posted consistently for like two weeks and I got like 500 new followers Which is a lot for me because I haven't been online in a while and I was like, wow I wish I could maintain this kind of velocity and so I'm looking online and I'm like who who I don't know But but but who do you mean like who can create the content or can post Posted.

I'm wonder, I'm, I'm wondering what the, what kind of system and who fits into that system. Because the most I ever created content was when I hired a videographer who I saw every other week, and that gave me clips. And then I could also like do my writing and things like that. But I think I'm, I feel so at capacity, um, when it comes to content, um, I'm not able to keep up and maybe I'm overthinking it.

Okay. I just wanna know the rights. Yeah. It's hard when you're also the coach, right? And delivering material. So it's just, it's just a lot. I completely get it. Um, do you, before I answer your question, do you have a salesperson or are you the salesperson? I am the salesperson. Okay. That's fine. What, what lights you up the most?

Is it the coaching? Is it the client facing part? I just realized that it's easy. It's easy for me to get one on one clients. I don't want to do that anymore, I don't think. I think I want to build out an offer suite that has like group coaching and educational offerings and a membership and I'm looking to pivot into educating and speaking because it comes easier for me and I just don't really want to hold.

The labor unless like I have one client that pays me six figures and I feel confident like supporting her because she pays me enough to do that, but even still, I'm like every now and then I'm like, I just want to cut it off because it's a lot, you know, so I just made that decision recently. Yeah, yeah, that's, that's fantastic.

So what you need is, um, because you are the brand, you do have to make content. And it'll be easier for you to make content. In fact, your time and energy will be freed up to make the content if you release the 101 clients. Because energy is going somewhere. If you just kind of corner it to one area, then you'll feel much better.

Um, this is the support that I kind of see for you. Someone who can post content, recycle your content. On the different platforms, you know, they can log into your Instagram, Tiktok, or whatever. Uh, you need somebody who can, you know, build out your courses unless you already have it slash a coach who can coach on your behalf and bonus points, a salesperson, those three roles.

And this isn't just like my intuition. This is just like a pretty classic, like online business formula. Just hearing your story where I think you you're going to be okay with and sales people typically typically operate off of commission and they can do really, really well if they're great at what they do.

So your next job is to find someone who can sell on your behalf. Um, and then you need someone who can post your content, and then you need someone who could, do you already have courses? That's the other thing, I run everything live, and then I just move on to the next thing. Yeah, I just now, I have a membership.

That I, like, open closed cart invite only, has like 45 people in it, I kind of want to grow it, so.

So this is the masculine so besides the salesperson the content person The other big masculine support that you need right now is just to take like two three weeks to build out that suite and nobody can do that but you because you it's your world you design it so i would just kind of like pop the brakes a little bit look at all your live recordings start cataloging categorizing you know bucket them together i would find like uh you know i don't know what you use like kajabi teachable sam cart i use sam cart and start uploading your live recordings and create like a course curriculum so two roles And then some productizing that can scale is kind of where you're at.

And once you figure out that productizing piece, then maybe you can bolt on other coaches. If that's even what you want to do. You don't have to. Yeah, that makes sense. I have a question, if you don't mind. What, how did, how are you supported in your content? Are you just showing up and just going or do you have people that do your branding or?

When you say content, do you mean like, how do I shoot it? How do you, how do you have so much velocity? Like, do you, and also I think your Instagram, I can't remember if it's branded or not. Like, do you have someone that does your branding? Or like, that makes it pretty? Do you have someone that, like, how do you, what's your content system?

I guess is the simpler question. Yes, yes. Let's talk about content. Cause I think a couple of people have this question. I know, uh, Nikki, I know she hasn't said anything, but I know she had that question. I know Megan. Talked about it. So let's, let's talk. Raise your hand if you need some support on content.

And by the way, I think everybody should be a content creator. Just P. S. If you're thinking about having a business, there's no escaping it. Do it. Okay, I, that's a, so, the reason why I'm not, my story's a little bit atypical. Compared to other online businesses. I had no intention of running a business when I first started making content It was like a meme page like a joke and then I accidentally went viral next thing I knew like people started looking me up and start buying products years before the pandemic or something So it's like very bizarre like my thing came together Um, but the reason why I share this with you is because I already had so much content before the business took off I had so much random content That I was just making this is why I told you guys you have to figure out what makes you happy Because I was just making content because it was making me ha it was making me happy.

I didn't care if people were watching. Just, I was in a very different headspace back at the time, and I just was purely doing stuff, treating it like therapy. So, I have somebody on my team, and her only job is to literally scroll back months and years of my social media page, download it, and repost it.

That's her only job to like scavenge hunt for like my content and just, you know, add new CTAs to it. So branding. So I don't have anything branded. I don't think it's necessary. Please like don't get caught up in that. Like some people get really caught up in like logo, things looking nice. Yeah, they can look presentable.

I don't think you have to. Look like trademarked, you know, so guys hear me. Am I breaking up? It says my internet's unstable

So I would when it come content I would first focus on bullet pointing All the ideas and all the solutions and problems that you feel passionate about. Make it more, well actually, if you take Hero's Journey and you do the obstacle opportunity phase, you will learn this. But we teach you what you should focus on in your content.

For me, I have Earth, I have to, no sorry, Air Houses, which means I have to talk about ideas. That's what all my content's about, just like ideas, education, or whatever. If you have Fire Houses, you should be like a motivator. Type and just like motivate you. I would focus more on that. Like what's the Like go ahead of me or anything. It's not a competition, but seriously, it's like i'm like, you know I had to put it this way, but it just doesn't matter Did you I mean, I don't know maybe my content Looks nice or some shit. I don't think it does. I think it's been fine and getting clients, you know I think i'm more I think i'm more focused on like the idea of it.

So um, so it so now that I say all this out loud laura It makes me think that maybe you are focusing on the wrong aspects of the content actually I don't worry about branding at all. I just. Well, I had a friend that was telling me that I need to do my branding, but I've grown my platform to a good amount of people with no branding at all.

And so I don't think I need it. I was just wondering if you had someone that did that for you. I think that it's more now that, now that I've heard you speak, I think it's more about introducing spaciousness into my, my day, into my week and letting go, even though it's. Like, not all of my clients, but kind of starting that process so that I have the availability to speak about things that I'm passionate about because right now I don't even feel that same kind of passion that I had before.

Yeah. For sure. Absolutely. That's so important. Like, I don't, I don't make content when I'm not feeling good. I just repost my old stuff, you know, I mean, I do that too.

Yeah, and it will, it will draw new eyeballs and it will draw new people who want to talk to, you know, the said salesperson that you might hire. So, I hope that answers your question. Yeah, no, that was a good one. I have one, I do have one person making my Instagram stories, but that's about it and I wouldn't call it really branded.

You know, she just, she just makes them for me and that's about it. But everything else I make and somebody else posts. Yeah, so it's basically what I'm hearing you say is that set up my offer suite in a way that supports Um, and so that's me and freeing up my time to make content, whether that's my offer suite content, my courses, my online content, and to also build out my offer suite and then start hiring someone who can post and recycle content, build out courses, and then sales closers when I need them.

I don't think you need to hire someone that will build out courses. I feel like you can do that on your own. Yeah, I think so. Oh, I have one more question. I don't know if I'm taking up too much space. But, uh, what, what happens when you feel like what you offer is a little vague? I know that you can relate to that.

I mean, it's not vague, but it's not like concrete, like marketing, for example. So this is why, this is why, like you have to make your own content because This is the big gotcha in this industry. What sells is you. When people buy stuff from you, yeah, you know, they know they have a product, but they're really buying because it's you.

Like, my competitor and I could be selling the exact same whatever product, but ultimately people will buy from people that they feel they can trust and like. That's why I'm kind of like a stickler about like, y'all should make the content because that's how you convey trust. Um, when it comes to the ambiguity of the product, I would try to like really narrow it down to what it is you're trying to solve for, you know, um, I always try to speak about like what's inspiring to me in the moment that I think is like the problem that of the times, but, you know, I think every coach is like their own niche that they want to stick to.

So. I would kind of double down on exploring that. It's like, yeah, what is the specific challenge? You want to help people out? Your product is allowed to be vague, by the way. I truly think so, because you never know how you're going to help people, but the initial hook should be specific. Yeah, because I bought stuff from people where I'm like, wow, this is like actually really, really broad.

It was still helpful, but their stuff was really broad and a lot of information. And, you know, in all fairness, there's no way their content could have covered all that initially. Um, so So yeah, for all the aspiring content creators in this room, this is why you gotta do the inner, you know, alignment, like, authenticity, like, confidence work, because that really shows on camera.

It's like, if you can just be yourself without, you know, fearing judgment, people can tell. People like that. Thank you. Yeah, of course. Okay, um, let me open up the floor just for, like, five to ten more minutes for any questions, comments. Today we went deep into more, like, You know, business, feminine versus masculine, do you feel like this guys, this like kind of clarified you guys, the delta or the difference between the two, and how it relates to you and what you need.

Okay, getting a lot of yeses. I forgot to say one thing about the feminine stuff that I love to teach people. If you're like, man, I really am not inspired. I don't know what the fuck I need to do. Like, I don't know what makes me happy or like whatever. I would watch documentaries. I would watch, um, maybe even movies, Netflix specials of like, you know, celebrity singers.

I would really look at performers and see which one lights you up. And that would research them.

I don't want to, I don't want to go too much into why that works, but it's almost like, uh, you, your energy being attracted to someone else's energy that might be living a timeline. Or possesses qualities that is also inside of you that is reminding you like, Hey, I can be that person or have that too.

So for example, like Lady Gaga does not light me up. Like when I watch a performance, I'm like, okay, she's great, but doesn't light me up. But somebody might watch her and be like, wow, it's like, I love this performance and it just awakens something in them. They don't know why.

So then you can start to pull in that thread. Like, what about that performance? Or what about Lady Gaga? What about her life? Like, it's so attractive to me. What is it that she's doing that I'm not living out of my own life? So do that exercise if you feel kind of blocked or stuck or Same thing with books, you can read books, same thing.

Alright, uh, any questions or comments that you guys want to pop in the chat or just unmute and like ask out loud? I have one. Yes, go ahead. Or maybe a few. Um, one is, what book would you, off your recommended book list, which one would you like, say would be the best for, based off of somebody's human design, or Whatever their challenges they're facing.

So, for example, I'm going to be selfish. So, for me. Human, like, are you asking for a human design book? No, not human design, but like, because the list is so long, so which one would you say, okay, based off of the my human design, which is 3 5 projector, what would you say is good for me? I don't really have a book list based on human design.

Um, I think there's people on my team who might have good recommendations, which I can ask them and circle back to you. But I personally, I personally, I just love to study people that I know who have that chart, that three, five or projector and just kind of observe them. We also do have a lot of resources, like in each of like the human design section.

So I would Look for them further. We might have to like beef up more resources, but there's definitely something there, but I don't have a book list for you. I would also just Google like, who is a three, five projector? That's like a popular person, like a public figure and kind of study. What, what life they live, like how they got to where they are.

That stuff really helps by the way, because they've hacked it. They figured it out. They made it work.

Between human design and astrology, um, like, which one do you think is more, I don't want to say powerful or more aligned with a person, but I'm going to say, like, which one is there one or the other or they work in tangent. So astrology feeds into human design. Human design was built on top of astrology.

Uh, but I always thought the way I use human design is actually for business stuff. It's like how to best self manage my own energy. Astrology is more for personality stuff. Like what are my shadows, what are my blocks, what are my Mommy issues, because all that stuff is in astrology. Yes, there's some business stuff too, you know, we covered that in the obstacle and what not.

But, and with these tools, what I always tell people is like, what's your goal with it? Like, what problem in life are you trying to solve for? And then figure out what tool you need the most.

Abby said, How can, how could a manifester get into content creation, lacking inspiration but finds it easy to do the boring grunt work some days I feel inspired, and many days, I don't have enough I would do that exercise I told you before about like, You know, the who inspires you. I also think manifestos in general need to be like some kind of a subject matter expert, expert, right? Like you're here to like spread ideas. So I would stay connected to what idea it is you want to spread and figure out a way to sustainably motivate yourself. I'll be frank with you. I don't know that many manifestos that can keep up with content creation.

I don't know why. It's shocking to me because you would think that out of all the types, they should be the one to make content, right? They do it for like a week and they stop. I don't, I don't get it. I don't know that doesn't have to be your story But I think it has to do with like getting bored quite frankly because you're here to initiate and move on, you know So if this is where you can come into alignment because this is and this is where I disagree with other human design experts Uh, or even astrologers, I believe that you can transcend your chart so you don't have to be You don't have to be like a projector.

You don't have to, you don't have to be like stuck with your type. So how can you challenge yourself to like break through certain things?

Yeah. I think the part where you said, uh, it gets boring. I think that's my main challenge is it does get boring. And then once I get bored, it's very difficult to get back into the groove of things again. Yeah. I understand that.

Um, Can I ask a question to Abby? Yeah, sure. Good. Um, do you have difficulty like, um, coming up with content ideas? So a couple of years ago when I was doing it, I didn't lack any ideas as such. I just got in the groove of things. And then I just kept it sustaining. But then after a while, I just took like a week break.

And then after that, I found it impossibly difficult to get back into it. And then I've just woke up. It's like, I think I'm just bored of doing this. I need to do something new. So there's, um, so there's, you can kind of, if you wanted to like find something within your niche, what you can do is, um, there's something called video AI and that way it's kind of in a way automated.

Um, so it, you would type in the prompt and then it would generate the video based off of your prompt. Um, also for content planning and, um, you know, what time you want to do it and so on and so forth. Or you can say, I'm having difficulties. You know, I get bored with content creation, you can put that in and it will provide you with a solution.

I think based on what June said, I think part of the problem is not understanding that maybe my main focus should be on spreading ideas. And I think it may just be that all the tools are in place, but I may not be focusing in the right direction. It could be that while I'm creating content, I may actually want to be maybe a storyteller, which I'm not seeing as an, as an example, and that may be something that I haven't explored much, maybe because I'm afraid of jumping into that direction, because there's not much grunt work in that sense, but it's rather grunt work that I don't want to do, so it could just be that resistance there, but I'm not sure yet, so that's where I think, still trying to figure out what the actual challenges are, but I think Part where it just gets boring is the struggle, right?

Yeah, Abhinav, I think, uh, one thing I would tell all my Manifestor clients is to just, like, hunker down and, like, get super crystal clear on this one core idea that really lights you up. And then, and then the next step is how do you continuously motivate yourself to, like, talk about that idea over and over again.

That's the name of the game. And that's, that's, by the way, that's a struggle that a lot of people face. But I think especially manifestors. I also think, when you guys, and this is the last thing I'm gonna say, I'm gonna let everybody go because we're over time. When we say content, you guys, it doesn't have to be video.

It could be a photo. It could be a poem. It could be just like a paragraph. It could be a quote. So, maybe also be flexible in terms of how you define content. Especially for you, Abhinav, like, um, you just posting a quote or a thought, like a tweet, goes a very long way. It doesn't have to be like a 30 second video every time.

Like, I have a manifestor client who loves posting thirst traps. And she's like an interior designer, works for her, whatever, great, you know, and then she's, she's really consistent with that, you know, she couldn't do that with videos, I'm sure. So, just be open minded in terms of like, how you define content, there's no rules with this, the goal is to just build a brand.

Okay, cool. How is everyone feeling? Throw out, if you can type in the comments, like just, you know, put an adjective before we wrap. Hope this was energizing and motivating and inspiring and setting you up for, you know, how to navigate this year better. Inspired, good, great direction. We have two more of these.

Uh, hopefully we can try to like, you know, go for a different topic next time or we can do a part two of this. That's, that's fine too. Um, yeah. And Abhinav, I will say this, I will say this to all manifestors. If you don't hunker down and don't, you're not consistent, you will get resentful later. A year later, you'll be like, why didn't I just keep at it? Because that's another thing that I hear a lot from manifestors, like, why did I just keep going?

Yeah. Why didn't you? This is how you come into alignment. You know, you're bored? Get over it. I'm serious. It's, you know, it's just, you think I'm not tired? I'm a reflector, you know, like, this is why I gotta sleep well, eat well. I'm gonna, I'm doing whatever it takes, you know, having the support that I need.

Okay. All right, cool. But my goal is to help you be All being very successful this year. I think y'all are on your way. So thanks for showing up for yourself and doing the war. You guys are incredible and amazing. And hopefully by the time we meet next time, you have some tangible action items that you started like executing on.

Yeah. Cool. Okay. See you guys next time and enjoy the rest of your evening or morning, wherever you're at. Bye. Take care. See ya.
